A WORD TO BANK DEPOSITORS

(From Toronto Globe).

The Globe is constrained by a sense of duty to say to bank depositors that upon their steadiness and confidence at the present time the financial well-being of Ontario in the immediate future largely depends.

Some of the depositors in our Canadian chartered banks have recently been making inquiries concerning their financial standing.

Some have gone farther and have changed their deposit accounts from one bank to another.

The Globe is assured, on the highest financial authority, that the deposits in every chartered bank carrying on business in Ontario to-day are amply secured, and that there is not the least necessity for concern as to their safety.

The removal of deposits from one bank to another does not necessarily increase their security, and it is understood that the banks themselves in these like the present, do not favor such action. It only tends still further to disturb confidence and calm confidence and sanity are essential.

The Globe trusts its readers will take no part in rocking the boat.

If you love the beautiful you will love to take a trip through our picturesque Bay of Quinte, and such a trip awaits you per Str. Brockville to Picton Fair on Wednesday, Sept. 19th. Picton Fair, always good, will this year be better than ever. Take a day unto yourself and enjoy this wonderful day's outing.

TAMWORTH.

Rev. Mr. Caswell, McDonald's Corners, has been visiting friends here this past few days.

Miss Ilah Reid and Mr. Harry Reid spent Sunday at Mr. John Brown's.

Mrs. Carscallen, of Harrowsmith, is spending a few days at Mrs. Alex Curl's.

Miss Elma Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. Wellesley Coulter and Mr. Wellington Coulter spent Friday evening at Mr. Elias Jackson's.

Mr. and Mrs. Alex Curl entertained a number of friends on Thursday evening.

A number attended the barn raising at Mr. Wm. R. Ritchie's on Thursday. Much credit is due the carpenter, Mr. Hartmunon.

Mrs. Elias Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Jackson and Mr. and Mrs. Wellesley Coulter spent Sunday at Mr. Lasher Maxwell's, Croydon.

Mr. and Mrs. James Evans spent Saturday at Napanee.

A number of the men in this vicinity were duck hunting Saturday.

Miss Beatrice Evans has returned home after spednig some time with friends at Enterprise.

Mrs. C. Knapp and family spent Monday at Mrs. Elias Jackson's.

DESERONTO.

Mr. Robert N. Sampson, farmer of the fifth concession of Lonsdale, met with a serious accident on Saturday last week. He had harnessed a team to a wagon and was in the act of getting aboard when the horses started forward, throwing him to the ground. As he fell his foot was caught in the spokes of the wheel and his leg was badly twisted. The injured man, who is about 55 years of age, suffered terribly and became unconscious. Dr. Willoughby, of Napanee, was immediately called and on his arrival he at once phoned for Reid's ambulance and the injured man was removed to the General Hospital, Kingston.

A thorough examination was made at the hospital and it was found that in addition to the injury to Mr. Sampson's leg from the twist, the hip was broken in three places.

Mr. Cornelius Naphan, of Lonsdale, is very ill and is confined to his bed.

Mr. E. L. Elliott, of Brooklime, has commenced his duties as principal of the public schools.

Deseronto Fall Fair Secretary will be pleased to learn that Mr. Gale has re-engaged with the High School Board to act as principal for the coming year.

Miss Rosa Sharpe and Mr. and Mrs. Krampen motored from their home in Belleville and are spending a week with Mrs. Sharpe, Fourth Street, and with relatives in Bay Bay.

Mrs. Harold Loyst, Toronto, is holidaying with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Loyst, Fourth St.

Mrs. Mason, of Belleville, is the guest of Mrs. Elizabeth Carscallen, Centre Street.

The Bishop of Ontario, Dr. Bidwell, preached in St. Mark's Church on Tuesday evening, Sept. 2nd, a very interesting and instructive sermon on the "Good Samaritan." He expressed his pleasure in taking part in the service, which he thoroughly enjoyed, and complimented the choir on the musical way they rndered the service. Mrs. Dale sang in excellent voice, "Teach Me to Pray."

A HOLD-UP NEAR NAPANEE

STANLEY GUEST, OF TRENTON, RELIEVED OF $110.

On Monday evening, on the Kingston Road, about two miles east of Napanee, Stanley Guest, of Trenton, while driving his car on the highway was held up by two men and $110 taken from him. The men were driving a new McLaughlin car and in the dim light it was impossible for Mr. Guest to give any sort of description of the hold-up men. The local police were immediately notified, but the men had already made a clean get away.

AUTOMOBILE HITS BOY; BREAKS BOTH HIS LEGS

UNFORTUNATE ACCIDENT OCCURS TO HARRY MILNE, FOUR MILES WEST OF ODESSA.

Harry Milne, aged eleven years, had both legs broken on Saturday afternoon at three o'clock, when he was struck by a high speed automobile on the Kingston road, about four miles west of Odessa. The lad was rushed to the Kingston General Hospital in James Reid's motor ambulance. When examined by X-ray, it was found that the bones in both legs had been broken above the knee and close to the hip. It is thought that unless complications set in, the lad will recover.

The injured lad lived with Fred Smith, a farmer, who resides on the provincial highway two miles Odessa. He is a home boy and had only been with Mr. Smith for a short time. The lad had gone over to the Smith home for the purpose of getting Mr. Smith a drink of water and was in the act of crossing the highway when the motor car struck him and knocked him to the ground. The car was not in the least fault, the boy when the driver caught sight of him crossing the road and applied all four brakes, and in so doing he certainly saved the life of the lad. When the car was brought to a stand-still, the driver jumped up the box and did everything in his power until help arrived. Dr. Munroe, Odessa, was called and rendered the lad first removed to the Kingston General Hospital.

People who were near by at the time state that the car driver was in no way responsible for the accident, as the auto was not travelling at a fast rate of speed.

When Dr. Munroe reached the scene he found that there was considerable broken glass in the boy's head and neck. It is thought that the fender struck the boy and the glass which cut him was out of the head light.

BOARD OF EDUCATION

The Napanee Board of Education met in the Council Chamber on Monday evening, Chairman Alpine Woods presiding.

Members present—Messrs. F. Gleeson, H. Daly, C. A. Wiseman, G. W. Gibbard, J. M. Thompson, J. W. Robinson, Jas. Craig, Geo. Thompson, Dr. Willoughby, Dr. Milsap.

The minutes of the previous session were read and approved.

Applications for increases in salary were read from Miss Etta Harrison, and Miss Jessie Mair. On motion the applications were referred to th Management Committee to bring in a recommendation at next meeting.

Acknowledgement from the Clerk of the Town of Napanee of the Secretary Treasurer's guarantee bond, was read and fyled.

A notice of the receipt of the Gov. Grant to the Collegiate Institute was read. The grant amounts to $1604.86 less contribution to superannuation fund, $438.25. Ordered fyled.

A deputation from the Home and School Club and Public School Board of Deseronto, appeared before the Board in reference to Medical Inspection in the Public Schools.

The deputation were present to ask why the matter had not been gone on with. Dr. Willoughby answered the deputation that the Deseronto members of the committee having resigned from the committee, the number of members left were not enough to warrant going on with the scheme and the matter remains in abeyance until the required number of schools are secured. It seems the Deseronto members resigned over the appointment of a doctor. The Chair or Secretary of the Committee addressed the Board, placing Deseronto's side of the case before the Board.

On motion the Board recommended the Committee of the mill to meet again and supply the Department of Education for a nurse, at a salary which the unit can afford to pay.

Accounts of G. W. Morden, telephoning $7.75 ; Advertising in Weekly Times and Review Co., $1.50 ; E. J. Pollard $92.20 ; The Robinson Co., $3.82 ; F. L. Hooper $7.30 ; F. L. Hooper $6.70 ; R. W. Allen, $14.20 ; R. W. Allen $3.40 ; Card's Garage $3.75 ; W. Kelly $17.45 were ordered paid.

Accounts of D. B. Wilson $13.75 ; Boyle & Son $77.45 were referred to Finance Committee with power to act.

On motion Mr. Thompson was authorized to make a sand playground at the West Ward School.

Dr. Morden reported that the Collegiate Institute was filled to capacity with some room to comfortably spare. He appeared to be an excellent one and should do splendid work.

Board adjourned.

GOLDEN WEDDING

Fifty years ago two young people found that they could not live without each other and were concluded to join their lives together and met the contingencies of life. These young people were George A. Blewitt, of Napanee, then a rising merchant, and the happy bride, was a daughter of the late County of Prince Edward, Mr. and Mrs. Blewitt were surprised on Monday evening last by a noisy crowd of friends stormed their dove nest and had an evening of congratulations. Napanee Lodge, No. 86, I.O.O.F., came like the wise men of the East, bearing gifts and read the following address :

Napanee, Sept. 10th, 1923.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Blewett,
Napanee, Ont.

Dear Friends :

We are reminded to-day of the few golden wedding anniversaries permitted to mortals—evidently only a select few in the community have this wonderful experience and it is fitting on such occassions to note the event. Hence our surprise visit here to-night to bring you congratulations and good cheer and with many wishes that you may be spared many seasons of health and life bliss and the enjoyment of the best that life can give.

We bring a slight token as a memento of our friendship and of the good wishes we here express and ask you to accept it that it may serve as a reminder of many pleasant memories which this day recalls.

Bro. Blewett's membership in Napanee Lodge No. 86, I.O.O.F., has been noteworthy for his regular attendance and faithful performance of duty and we recall with pleasure the many occasions on which Mrs. Blewett has assisted in making our social evenings in the Lodge a success.

Yours very sincerely,

Signed on behalf of Napanee Lodge No. 86, I.O.O.F.

W. T. BAIRD, N.G.
H. SEYMOUR, V.G.

Long may George and his popular wife remain among us, brightening the lives of all who know them and showing forth a living example of happy married life with which heaven has so far blessed them. Congratulations from everybody is joined in by the Napanee Express newspaper staff.

How the Rainbow Comes.

Do you know how the rainbow gets in the sky?

The beautiful phenomenon was described recently by Mr. Charles H. Darling.

He said that light was due to a special sort of wave caused by very tiny things called electrons, which flew about in all directions at a tremendous speed. They made no waves until they came up against what scientists call ether.

The waves produced by the contact of the electrons with ether were of different colors. Long waves with a big distance between the tops gave red light; with less distance, blue.

All light was really a mixture of colors, which could be separated. The rainbow was caused by drops of water sifting the sunlight into its different colors. These colors formed the spectrum, which was first discovered by Sir Isaac Newton.

The spectrum could be produced artificially by passing light through a mirror ruled with lines of fourteen thousand to the inch. Things in the world had other colors because they possessed the power of absorbing certain colors while sending others back to the eye.

When substances were burnt in a flame, and the light sent through a prism, the spectrum showed dark lines. Every substance had different lines. It was by this means that the composition of the sun and stars was determined.

Dog Saved Child.

A remarkable story of a dog's devotion to his young mistress came to light recently in London, Ont., when Humane Inspector Tustin related the story that a young child, residing in the west end of the city, had gone to the store for her mother, and, despite efforts on the part of both the child and the mother to keep the dog from going, it persisted in accompanying the little girl. Returning toward home, the child stopped and stood on the C.P.R. tracks, unaware of the approach of a fast west-bound train. The dog, realizing the danger, rushed forward and hurled his body against the child, knocking her to safety just as the locomotive reached the spot. The dog perished before he could regain safety.

Expenses of Columbus.

The discovery of America, according to documents found in the archives of Genoa, cost a little more than $7,000. The fleet of Columbus was the value of about $2,000, while the salary of the admiral amounted to $300 a year. The two captains who accompanied the expedition received a salary of $200, and the members of the crew were paid at the rate of $2.40 a month each. Columbus evidently got nothing for his share of the job.

Who Dare to Be Judges?

In Montreal a few years ago a man left his dog in the care of the church he attended and to which he left his money. But Germany is the country for quaint charities. In the little town of Hirschau there is a request that provides prizes for the men who marry the ugliest, the most crippled, and the women over forty who have been jilted at least twice. The awards are made every year. The ugliest woman gets a dowry of $90; the most crippled $75, and the woman over forty $50. The trustees have the power to increase the amount in the case of any man who carries a more than usually ugly woman. This strange charity is the result of a wealthy man's discovery of the great power of beauty. He wishes to help those women who are without it.

Here and There

Protection of migratory birds has been added to the duties of the Canadian Pacific Railway's constabulary.

Airplanes attached to the Ontario Forestry Department are now equipped with radio sending apparatus so that they can keep in constant touch with the chief and other rangers.

There was an increase of sixty-three per cent in the number of immigrants to Canada during the last three months as compared with the corresponding period of last year.

Canadian Pacific agents in Britain are recruited nearly five thousand men for work in the harvest fields of Western Canada and, through lack of steamship accommodation closed their doors on as many more who, attracted by the special harvest rate, sought to enter Canada.

The branch lines program of the Canadian Pacific Railway carried out this year will bring into operation on the prairies a larger mileage than any one year since 1914. Of the 431 miles of line under construction, 281 miles will be ready for handling grain in the Fall, and of the balance, 115 miles will be ready for steel by the winter freeze-up.

A building has been acquired by the University of Toronto to be entirely devoted to the manufacture of insulin. This will be the only factory in Canada to manufacture the curative fluid in commercial quantities and, although it is manufactured in the United States, Great Britain and Denmark, the Canadian product will be sold throughout the world.

Dawson City recently celebrated the twenty-seventh anniversary of the discovery of the Klondyke. In an exhibition of Yukon products are given on the insides of the cover, while on the back are printed calendars for last, this year and next year.

In the book itself are pages for the entry of receipts and expenditures (both of which may be seen at a glance on the same page) relative to cattle, horses, sheep, swine, poultry, crops and labour, and there is also ample space for miscellaneous items. There is a page for amounts owed to and by the farm, and forms on which may be made inventories of land and buildings, of live stock, of feed and supplies, and of machinery. Following is a page on which may be filled out a summary of the year's business, together with the few directions necessary to filling it out intelligently at the end of the year. Further, for the farmer's information there is a table in which to enter acreage and yield of crops, and one in which to kep a live stock service record.

The whole thing has been reduced to the simplest possible terms, and should prove, to the general farmer, one of the most useful publications issued from the Experimental Farms for some time. It should be recognized that farming is a business, the same as any other. If a business is not paying, the owner wants to know just why it is not doing so. This little book will enable the farmer to keep an accurate record of each department of his business, find out how much he is making from each, or how little, and so be able to adjust matters accordingly.

The "Farmer's Account Book" is obtainable from the Publications Branch of the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, at a nominal charge of ten cents. No postage need be placed on letters of application.

A FARMER'S ACCOUNT BOOK

(Experimental Farms Note)

Any merchant handling several different lines of goods would retard it a folly to neglect to keep a complete set of books enabling him at all times to ascertain his profits and losses on the various commodities he sells, his assets and liabilities, and so on. A manufacturer who failed to do so would be heading for insolvency. It is curious then, that Canada's basic industry — agriculture — should be carried on, so far as individual producers are concerned with it, in so casual a manner with regard to accountkeeping. Especially is this strange when it is considered how simple farm book-keeping is by comparison with that of other businesses.

In a survey of some eight hundred farms conducted some time ago it was discovered that very few farmers indeed followed anything like a complete method of accounting, while a large number adopted absolutely none at all. These, beyond having a sort of general idea as to "what paid," were often quite hazy as to actual returns from different lines of work.

In order, if possible, to remedy this undesirable state of affairs the Dominion Experimental Farm system has published an extremely simple farmer's account book, which will adequately serve all necessary purposes. In size and thickness it is no larger than a school exercise book, and is designed to last a complete year. To "keep" it needs no knowledge of ordinary accounting; simple the ability to write and add; and a record of all transactions might be made in an hour a week. A few plain directions as to making entries, some aids to taking inventories, a table of silo capacities and a gestation table. Are given on the insides of the cover, while on the back are printed calendars for last, this year and next year.

In the book itself are pages for the entry of receipts and expenditures (both of which may be seen at a glance on the same page) relative to cattle, horses, sheep, swine, poultry, crops and labour, and there is also ample space for miscellaneous items. There is a page for amounts owed to and by the farm, and forms on which may be made inventories of land and buildings, of live stock, of feed and supplies, and of machinery. HE GOT NO PEACE.

Lord Northcliffe Speaks of Toronto In His Diary.

The diary of the late Lord Northcliffe, the great newspaper publisher, of his trip around the world 1921-1922 has very recently been published. Canadians will be interested in the following note on his day in Toronto:

"At the golf course yesterday, Sunday, despite the fact that all of the Toronto people are away in their forests and lakes, they gave me no peace. Men and women alike watched me. I played rotten but was quite a good one. I beat a much better player than myself." The "better player" was a prominent Toronto man who played with Lord Northcliffe at the Lambton course.

Lord Northcliffe was unwell when he was here. But his entry in his diary that "I have crowds demonstration, ceremonial and curiously enough, although I am one myself, newspaper reporters" — was the story of a Toronto newspaperman who was sent to interview him when he was here. Lord Northcliffe didn't want to talk, but the newspaperman put it up to him in this way: "Lord Northcliffe, if you sent a man to interview a prominent visitor you would expect him to get it and write a story."

Lord Northcliffe thought a moment and then replied "that is a hard obstacle to overcome" Immediately he made an appointment with the reporter who got a good "story" from a big guy in the game.

Of the British dominions, according to his diary, Lord Northcliffe loved New Zealand, but Australia seems to have left him comparatively cold. He detested its State Socialism and was fearful of the power against the persistent yellow man.

"The white Australia ideal seems to me to be impossible. I cannot help thinking that the climate has something to do with the effect upon English people in this tropical Australia. They grow lazy and Bolshy."

Neither did he like India and says so. "What do we want India for?" he asks. "Prestige: Perhaps? Cash? We certainly don't get any from it The thousands of able men from home could do better elsewhere. For example New Zealand, Canada, Malay States, China."

He thought the white people in the Far East drink too much and he could see no good points at all in tropical life.

Who Wrote the First Books?

The earliest known book is "The Book of the Dead," written over 5,000 years B.C. It was written at the time of the building of the Great Pyramid (3733-3666 B.C.) and contains invocations to the deities, psalms, etc.

DEMOCRACY ON TRIAL—II

Dr. J. G. Shearer.

In our former article we emphasized the necessity for a high standard in mind and morals on the part of the citizens generally if democracy is to prove in practice an efficient form of Government.

One of the points at which democracy is tested and in consequent danger is at the ballot box. The secret ballot is a safeguard of honesty and freedom in the expression of political manhood and womanhood. It makes possible the honest vote. It is not sufficient to guarantee it. There are sinister influences at work. One of these is the purchasing of votes. The effort undoubtedly is too frequently made in keen party contests. In many cases it is successful. An honoured member of the House of Commons in authority for the statement in my possession—a signed statement —that in his constituency, a rural one in Eastern Canada, 70 per cent. of the electors were open to receive whiskey or money or both and 50 per cent. would importune candidates or workers for money or liquor or both. There are cases on public record where professing Christian men were the agents for distribution of corrupt funds and liquor. It would seem that many who are honest in business have no conception of honesty in politics. The President of one of our old Universities tells that when he went to vote in a certain general election he met an official of a rural Church of the denomination to which he belonged and in conversation was informed that this man had two sons voting for the first time at this election and that he, the father, had thought well to give them a start about their duty in the exercise of their new power of manhood and had said, "Boys take all the money the Tories will give and take all the money the Grits will give you—but vote your conscience!" What did this man mean by voting your conscience? Simply vote your party ticket."

But aside from cases of rigid party electors who will take money but not sell their votes the party system lends itself to the buying of seats in Parliament, Legislature or municipal council. In each 1000 electors in a close constituency there may be 40 of the party, 400 of the other, 100 independents and 100 purchasable voters. The keen election leaders will estimate what the 200 half of whom can be bought, and the other half can be persuaded. A purchasable ten per cent. may decide an election in a large number of constituencies. There lies a very strong temptation to unscrupulous candidates and party leaders. The history of practical politics in Canada provides all too clear and unsavory evidence that in a certain number of constituencies the temptation has been yielded to and the will of the people defeated. Democracy has in that case and to that extent failed.

Practical politicians not infrequently speak of politics as "the greatest game on earth." If it is merely a strenuous struggle between two sets of their perfidence is a hopeful sign of the times. The rugged independence of the electorate in Great Britain is well known. The average life of a government there is not above four or five years. And the life of Governments in Canada would seem to be growing shorter. Insofar as this indicates a development of the spirit of independence in politics it would seem to be in the interests of the whole people and to make for successful democracy.

One of the greatest needs is a larger number of men and women of real ability offering themselves as representatives. To such men and women this means real sacrifice of self interest but it should also be the spirit of service in politics. Service ought to be the universal ideal not in politics alone, but in commerce, industry, the professions—indeed in every sphere of life.

One thing that would lead more worth while men and women to offer themselves for service in politics is the elimination of slanderous abuse from platform and press in political campaigning which in the past has been, and in the present is altogether too common.

It would be highly amusing were it not so serious to read the purely party organs and to hear some leaders' speeches in a heated contest. It is simply wholesale unblushing misrepresentation and slander!

How to Make Delicious Grape Jelly

Stem and crush thoroughly about 3 lbs. grapes. Add ½ cup water, stir until boiling and simmer 10 minutes in closely-covered saucepan. Place cooked fruit in cheese-cloth bag, and squeeze out juice. Measure 8 level cups (3½ lbs.) sugar and 4 cups of the juice into large saucepan, stir and bring to a boil. At once add 1 bottle (scant cup) Certo, stirring constantly, and bring again to a full boil for ½ minute. Remove from fire, let stand 1 minute, skim and pour quickly.

A Non-Smoker.

Col. John A. Currie, M.P.P., for S. W. Toronto and central figure in the famous "misdirected letter" episode in the closing days of the Legislature, is a non-smoker. Time was when Col. Currie smoked very heavily and, since it is always interesting to know how a victim of the tobacco habit escapes, a friend asked the colonel recently, how he accomplished the feat.

"It came about quite by accident a year or so ago," explained Col. Currie. "I had been very ill for some weeks and the doctor forbade me tobacco. When finally I got down stairs again, Mrs. Currie filled up my favorite pipe and handed it to me. I looked at it for a minute and, to her surprise, I said, I thought I would give up tobacco. And so I have not smoked since, which is a good thing for me as I used to smoke too much."

At the time he told of the incident, Col. Currie was explaining to an attendant at the Legislature how a clay pipe could be mended by scratching a finger and using the blood to seal the break. He has no prejudice against tobacco but simply feels that he has smoked enough already to last him a lifetime.

Royalty and Golf.

The Duke of York and his bride have subscribed to the new municipal golf course in Richmond Park, near London, each paying three guineas for annual tickets. This course has recently been opened to give people of moderate means an opportunity to play golf at a reasonable cost. So the duke and duchess, if they play there, which is close to their own White Lodge, will have to take their turn with the artisans and clerks who throng the public links daily.

The present royal family of England is extremely democratic, and its members do not "put on side," though maintaining a proper degree of dignity and distance. The Duke of York's elder brother, the Prince of Wales, is a free mixer and interposes few barriers of restraint between himself and the public.

A contact between the Duke and Duchess of York and the people on the golf course will be wholesome for both sides. The game is a leveler. Any player who fubs a shot has a strong sympathy for any player in the same class, and any one who makes a good stroke, a long drive or an accurate putt is admired, whether he be in one class or another. There is, indeed, no "class" in golf, that is in the real game, the game that is played for the game's sake. There is just one line of distinction, and that is between the amateur and the professional and it is only a technical line at that.

Without doubt the Duke and Duchess of York will have a jolly good time on the courses at Richmond Park, and they will be cordially received by the devotees of the ancient game. The golfing people will probably ask no dispensations or extra courtesies, taking their chances with the others.—Washington Star.

Owned by Spy.

The farm properties at Cedar Springs owned by Max Budding, who prior to the war was chief spy in Ontario for the German Government, were recently sold by auction at Chatham. The sale was conducted under the Foreclosure of Mortgages Act.

Budding resided at Cedar Springs mor severalyears, to outward appearances a prosperous fruit-grower, but spending considerable of his time, it was alleged, looking up the resources of the province. He left Cedar Springs one week before the declaration of war, and was last seen in Toronto by a local man a few days after. Budding said at that time he had been recalled to Germany by his Government.

Some weeks later it transpired that he was head of a German espionage system in Ontario, and his two farms at Cedar Springs were seized by the Government.

Duke Must Stand Trial On Some Serious Charges Society Greatly Excited

Ireland's premier peer, seventh of his line, head of the historic house of Fitzgerald and Duke of Leinster, who was to have raced across the Atlantic this summer in a small sail boat against a well known former Torontonian, is having less agreeable things to occupy his attention at the present moment than the reeling of a mainsail or a shifting of the backstays. His grace, who is just 31, and served during the Great War as a lieutenant in the Irish Guards, has, after a series of protracted hearings in Bow street police station, London, been committed for trial under heavy bail, on criminal charges of purchasing jewels and automobiles on credit without notifying the vendors that he was an undischarged bankrupt, and then selling the automobiles and pawning the jewels without paying for them. This, according to British law, is a misdemeanor, but not a felony.

Had the alleged offences for which the duke is held been of the latter category the police magistrate would have been compelled to commit him for trial by the House of Lords. That is to say by his fellow peers sitting as the highest tribunal of the land, under the Lord High Steward appointed by the crown for the occasion, and who would, in accordance with modern custom, be the Lord High Chancellor.

But the charges laid at the door of the young duke are only misdemeanors, and owing to this he will have to submit to trial by the ordinary tribunals. The offender is not free to choose his own tribunal, and contrary to popular impression, trial by the House of Lords can hardly be considered as a privilege, although described as such. For a peer guilty of felony has got to be tried by the House of Lords whether he likes it or not, says the Marquise de Fontepoy, writing in the New York Sun and Globe, while in cases of misdemeanors a peer cannot put forward any pretensions to trial by his fellow peers.

One of the most famous trials of peers by their brethren of the House of Lords was that of Simon Fraser, Lord Lovat, the Scottish Jacobite, who went to the block in 1747, found guilty of high treason. Lord Lovat, then aged 80, had been an ardent supporter of the exiled Stuarts, and he was one of the last if not the very last person in England who was executed by beheadal. His rank and years saved him from the gallows for the more dignified mode of death reserved in times past for kings and nobles. The old peer, who could scarcely walk and had borne himself with great dignity all through the trial, bowed his head for the axe unflinchingly.

Lords Kilmarnock, Cromarty and Balmerino were other Jacobite rebels tried in the House of Lords. The peers adjudged them all traitors for the part they took in attempting to restore the banished Stuarts and pronounced sentence for high treason against them. But in the case of Lord Cromarty, if not in all three cases, the sentence of death was subsequently remitted and a pardon issued.

Lord Ferrers, convicted in 1760 by a jury of his peers sitting in state in old Westminster Hall, did not escape the gibbet. Ferrers, who had murdered his valet, was condemned to be hanged. His lordship upheld the traditions of his caste for courage at least, and on the fatal day appeared clad in a handsome suit of blue and silver, set off with lace ruffles and powdered wig. He might have been a nobleman going to royal levees instead of a condemned murderer going to the gallows. At the prison gates his own private coach met him. Prison guards shut its armorial panelled doors and under escort he drove to dread Tyburn, the place of execution. Ferrers, who was the last British nobleman to be executed for any cause, was granted the privilege of being hanged with a silken cord instead of the hemp rope in general use.

The last case of a trial for felony by the House of Lords was in 1901 when the present Earl Russell was charged with bigamy for having as an Englishman, married in the United States an American woman named Mariott Somerville on the strength of a divorce which he had obtained from his first wife at Reno, without having obtained from the British courts a dissolution of the ties that bound him to his first wife. As British law did not recognize the American divorce Lord Russell was found guilty and sent to jail for a year.

The Duke of Leinster will have to take his place with those who are committed jointly with him on the charges of fraud with which they are accused. At the preliminary hearings in Bow street the duke gave a lurid account of the financial troubles he had undergone since he had succeeded to family honors and estates. The affair has gone so far that there seems little likelihood of compromise now.

Little Bits of Old London Have Wandered Far Afield Found In Strange Places

One of the alcoves of old London Bridge of history and nursery-rhyme may still be seen in the grounds of Guy's Hospital; another is in Victoria Park, and a country house in Kent is built from the stones of the same historic structure.

Fancy living in a house built of the very stones over which Jack Cade and his men tramped, and over which the English bowmen marched to Agincourt!

Some of the stones of Christ's Hospital, on the site of which the post office is built, are part of a river wall down Rainham way. Temple Bar is re-erected at Theobald's Park, but there ought to be in Hyde Park. The front of the old Mercer's Hall, which was in Cheapside, is now in Swanage; and Crosby Hall is re-erected on Chelsea Embankment.

Baron Grant was the railway magnate who came a bad cropper in Victorian times, and who had a wonderful palace at Kensington, the gates and railings of which are now at Sandown Park, the Esher racecourse. The famous Heptagonal Pillar which gave its name to the notorious Seven Dials is re-erected at Weybridge.

The ugly equestrian statue which used to occupy the place now occupied by the Quadriga at Hyde Park Corner is now on Laffan's Plain, Aldershot. The statue of Charles I., which used to be in Soho Square was bought by W. S. Gilbert, of "Mikado" fame; and the broken-nosed statue of Good Queen Anne which used to adorn the flags in front of St. Paul's now adorns a private park at Holmhurst, Hawk.

Not everyone who crosses the suspension bridge over the Avon Gorge at Clifton, from which, before it was caged in, there used to be so many suicides, realizes that it is the old Hungerford Bridge about which Dickens writes in more than one of his novels.

The figures of Welcome, Truth, Fidelity, Night, and Morning, which formerly decorated the exterior of Burney Barnard's Park Lane mansion, now adorn the Victoria Gardens, Brighton, and it is said that the original Aid Gate, where the pump now is, is at Rothley Castle, Northumberland.

One of the city churches dedicated to St. Dunstan was pulled down in 1830, and with it disappeared one of the stock "sights of London"—two Jacks of the Clock, or "savages," as they were popularly called, which used to strike the quarters. These figures were purchased by the Marquess of Hertford, and set up at his villa in Regent's Park, which in their honor he named "St. Dunstan's." The later and greater fame of this house is known to all the world.

The church of St. Margaret's, Lothbury, close to the Bank of England, is not one of the most beautiful of Wren's structures, but it has one distinction. It has become a sort of receiver of the flotsam and jetsam of city churches which have suffered demolition, and there may be seen many relics which most people think have ceased to exist.

Dress of Highland Soldiers.

Two matters of Scottish national interest have recently received attention, the first being whether it would not be possible to restore full dress to the Highland regiments, and the second whether sporran should not be restored as an article of service dress. There is, the London correspondent of the Scotsman understands, no present intention on the part of the Army Council to restore full dress, because this would involve the large question of economy and an expenditure which could not be countenanced in the present financial situation.

As to the reintroduction of the sporran as an article of service dress, I understand that this is receiving the favorable consideration of the War Office. Although not in accordance with the regulations, many Highland soldiers are wearing the sporran, which has probably been issued to them with the sanction of regimental chiefs who have turned a blind eye to the regulations, and it will not be surprising to find that the War Office has regularized the position, and have sanctioned, as a concession to national sentiment, the general issue to Highland regiments of this article of dress.

Raided St. John.

Stephen Smith of Machias, Maine, a delegate to the Massachusetts congress, made a raid on St. John, N.B., in August, 1776. He burned the barracks and destroyed the fort, which was protected by only four men, and captured a brig, of 120 tons, laden with oxen, sheep and swine, which were intended for the British troops at Boston. This sudden raid had the effect of putting the British authorities on the alert, and vessels of war were sent to cruise in the Bay of Fundy to protect the settlements along its shores.

The people of Machias, emboldened by the success which attended their first raid, attempted to seize and hold the fort at St. John, but were driven away by a force sent from Halifax. In consequence of this second raid on St. John, a block house and stockades were erected on a hill overlooking the harbor, and dignified by the name of Fort Howe. Two years after this event about 600 Indians assembled at the mouth of the Jemseg for the purpose of destroying the settlement of Maugerville, but the people escaped across the river to Oromocto, where a fort had been erected. This was the last threat of Indian war, and in the following year, 1780, numbers of Indians assembled at Fort Howe and swore allegiance to King George.

"Edward Longshanks."

There was a famous king of England born in 1239, who grew to such a length that his people called him and he is known in history as Edward Longshanks. (Edward I.) A cockerel of one of the game varieties raised in Great Britain exhibited at the International Poultry and Pigeon show in London, also grew uncannily tall, and to him was given the same name. He stands 30 inches in height, which would enable him to eat off an ordinary table, and which made him much too tall for the exhibition cages. He does not appear to be especially beautiful, though like his renowned namesake he is probably a grand fighter.

DIPLOMACY.

Have There Been Changes for the Old to the New Way.

"Diplomacy by conferences," he writes, "is no new discovery, as those who claim to see in it a panacea for international difficulties appear to claim. But the cases proper for its application occur but rarely. In other respects advantage would appear to lie in leaving the management of foreign affairs to the expert who has been trained by life-long experience to deal with such matters. It is he who is best able to advise on the correlation of the actual question of the moment with a number of other issues, the interdependence of which may not always be apparent to the politician, whom the interests of the internal situation rather incline to an opportunist solution.

"The successful handling of foreign relations, notably with Latin peoples and still more so with Orientals, is experts' business, and demands experience and special education, no less than any art or other function of human activity. Correspondence in the newspapers has called attention to the striking contrast between the terms of the Treaty of Paris in 1815, under the wise guidance of Lord Castlereagh and the Duke of Wellington, and those of the Treaty of Versailles. When the millennium comes; when there are no more rival international interests and men have no longer reason to be other than frank and sincere, there will be no more need for professional diplomatists.

"How often in recent times after conferences have broken up with the assurance that agreement has been reached; and with the publication of formula to which the several parties have consented, have we learned a few weeks later that divergencies have arisen as to the interpretation of the formula! It is then discovered that in essentials there has been no real agreement. A further conference has to assemble to discuss the interpretation, and action is once more postponed.

"The principals engaged in the new diplomacy, rarely endowed with the gift of tongues and, therefore, at a disadvantage in being only able to appreciate at second hand the position adopted by their fellow negotiators, not moreover accustomed as were the old trained representatives to weigh the import of words and phrases with precision before accepting them, are forced only too often to agreed not to disagree, until their apparent agreement is put to the test.

"A good many years have passed since the late Lord Salisbury likened the work of the Foreign Office to that of bees in a glass hive. We shall not advance matters by illuminating the hive electrically. Not altogether unassociated with publicity, because of the opportunities afforded thereby, is a new factor unknown to the old diplomacy which first revealed its influence in the late war.

"The insidious weapon of propaganda has been, and will probably be more and more used to create currents of opinion in certain quarters in order to promote specific aims. Constant vigilance, intelligent observation, and perception of the forces at work in other countries will be necessary to estimate real values, to detect the sources of inspiration, and if possible, to counter them. The peace and prosperity of the world will in the future, even more than in the past, depend on the manner in which international questions are handled."

FIGHTS HEAVY ODDS.

Returned Nova Scotian Soldier Claims Valuable Property.

In spite of the adverse decisions of two courts of law and of the Dominion Government, D. Stanley MacNeil, a returned soldier now employed as a stevedore at Sydney Mines, N. S., has apparently not abandoned hope of attaining possession of a property purchased by his brother for $2,000 and now estimated to be worth $2,750,000. MacNeil's story would furnish material for an interesting modern novel. Whether or not additional chapters of it are to be written will probably be decided at the next session of the Nova Scotia Legislature, but even its action may leave the issue in doubt.

Francis J. MacNeil, a brother of Stanley MacNeil, in April, 1911, purchased a property at Island Point on Little Bras d'Or Lake, Cape Breton, for $2,000, and conveyed it to his sister, Jane MacNeil. A month later, gypsum having been discovered on the land, the MacNeils gave one Fletcher an option to purchase the property for $35,000. That option was never exercised. In July, 1911, the Montreal contracting firm of Sparrow and MacNeil, in which Francis MacNeil was a partner, went into liquidation, and the curator of the estate took action against Jane MacNeil to recover the gypsum property for the creditors, alleging that it had been purchased with the bankrupt firm's money. The trial judge upheld Miss MacNeil's title to the land. The Supreme Court of Nova Scotia reversed the trial judge's decision. The Supreme Court of Canada in 1915 sustained the judgment of the Nova Scotia tribunal. Thereupon, the curator of the firm of Sparrow and MacNeil sold the Island Point property for $2,500 to Gordon Fletcher, who in turn sold it to Plaster Quarries Limited, of Montreal, which, in its prospectus, valued the gypsum deposits at $2,750,000.

D. Stanley MacNeil, to whom, it is stated, the Island Point property was to have been transferred by Miss MacNeil, did not become a party to the case until 1919 when he returned to Canada after five years' service overseas. He contended that witnesses had not been cross-examined in the original trial and that material evidence had not been adduced, and, in 1921, succeeded in inducing the Nova Scotia Legislature to pass a statute restoring the property to his sister and providing that claims against it should be submitted to the courts within one year. Disallowance of this Act by the Dominion Government was speedily sought. The Justice Department at Ottawa, however, advised the enactment of repeal legislation. A repealing bill was introduced in the Nova Scotia Legislature in the session of 1922, but was not passed. Later, in the same year, the original statute was disallowed by the Dominion Government, on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice because it reversed a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada and was "an extraordinary piece of legislative injustice."

Animals as Gold Miners.

The finding of a small piece of gold in a dog's paw, responsible for the recent gold "rush" in Alaska, recalls other instances of animals which have pointed out the path to prosperity to their owners.

Some years ago a boy in Australia was trapping rabbits, and his dog, scratching at a hole, exposed a mass of yellowish rock. The boy, who knew the country to be gold bearing, told his father that he believed he had "struck it rich."

The father, however, pooh-poohed the idea, but when at last the boy persuaded him to go to the spot, he found what his son said was true. A mine was started, and since then it is estimated that £70,000 has been made as a result of the dog's discovery.

One of the most valuable finds made with the help of an animal was in Montana, where a sapphire ledge was revealed to the eyes of a badger-trapper.

The man was setting his traps one day when his hand encountered something hard in the earth thrown out by the animals in their burrows in rigs. Closer investigation revealed a number of sapphires. To-day the trapper is a rich man.

In Africa a small diamond find was once made by a man who discovered a diamond in the gizzard of a goose, and explored all its feeding places till he found the valuable one.

American Settlers.

American settlers in Canada are now estimated to number about one million, most of them being found on farms in the western provinces. United States citizens account for 20 per cent. of the settlement of nearly 100,000,000 acres of Western Canadian land as against 20 per cent. on the part of immigrants from Great Britain. American citizens have also been the heaviest purchasers of privately held improved lands and farms. According to the Canadian Pacific Railway, American contribution to Canada reached its height in 1913 when 139,000 American citizens crossed into the Dominion. Since the war the average has been about 50,000 until 1922, when only 24,000 arrived.

Agate Bridge.

The greatest wonder of the Petrified forest is the agate bridge. This is a huge tree trunk, 100 feet long, spanning a 60-foot chasm, says Nature Magazine. The entire tree is made up of agates, jaspers, chalcedony, and other highly colored and handsome stones. In the canyon directly below the agate bridge is a pool of water, and around it grow the only trees in the whole country.

(Above) Hong Kong from the Peak, and, inset, a picturesque freight junk. (Circle) C.P.S.S. "Empress of Canada" in Hong Kong harbor. (Right) A sunset view of Hong Kong harbor, and below, one of the palatial river steamers which ply between that port and Canton.

WHEN you make your trip to the Far East, in which China must be embraced, you will be sure to visit Hong Kong and Canton, for both places are renowned in poetry and prose the world over. You cannot, very well, call at Hong Kong without "adding your number" at Canton, for the places are only eighty miles distant from each other.

The Canadian Pacific "Empresses" call at Hong Kong and from there you can proceed to Canton by either train or river steamer. Those in the "know" usually go by train and return by steamer, or vice versa. By the train you will be able to feast your eyes on southern China inland scenery and village life. By the steamer you go up or down the Canton river. Both journeys are interesting; but the run on the Canton river will be more enjoyed. A number of the Canton river steamers, as well as being large, fast and spacious vessels, will take a lot of beating as regards accommodation, table and general service. There is at all times plenty of excellent company on board — visitors like yourself, and European residents in various parts of Asia — in whom you will discover charming and instructive companions.

There will be so much to attract your attention in Hong Kong that your heart's desire will be to "just see every place of interest at one time." As your steamer glides into the magnificent harbour hundreds of Chinese junks will be thrust upon your view, under sail, tacking, "go-ing about" and at anchor. They are all picturesque to a degree, with their rich brown sails, peculiar rigstrictly indigenous to Old Cathay—and their hulls with an eye on the port and starboard sides of the bow, for, as the Chinese will explain to you: "Suppose no got eye, no can see."

Stretched before you, as your steamer passes to her wharf at Kowloon, is the noble Praya—now named Connaught Road—or waterfront. The denizens of Shanghai call their waterfront, The Bund. Part of the Praya, to the left, is land reclaimed from the sea. Splendid buildings, with their tiers of verandahs, have been erected upon it, among which is that of the Hong Kong Club, one of the most luxurious social institutions in the world.

Wedding at Read.

The church of St. Charles Borromeo, Read, was the scene of a pretty wedding on Tuesday morning, Sept. 4th, when Angela Mabel, daughter of Mrs. Lally and the late Joseph Lally, Read, became the bride of James Vincent, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Hanley, Read. Rev. J. T. Hanley, brother of the groom, officiated, assisted by the pastor, Rev. T. McCarthy. The bride, who entered the church to the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march, played by Mrs. Hopkins, aunt of the bride, wore a navy blue tailored poiret twill suit with black picture hat en suite, and carried a shower bouquet of ophelia roses and ferns. After the ceremony, a dainty breakfast was served at the home of the bride's mother. Then the happy couple left amid showers of confetti, for Toronto, Hamilton and Niagara.

Spring—Sharpe.

A pretty wedding was solemnized on Wednesday, August 29th, at 11 a.m., at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wesley P. Sharpe, when their only daughter, Gladys Florence, became the bride of G. Willfred Spring, only son of Mr. and Mrs. George Spring, Bath, Ont. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. G. Hoffman. The bride entered the drawing room on the arm of her father, to the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march played by Mr. Clayton Bell and looked charming in a gown of ivory Silk Canton Crepe, caught with seed pearls. Her veil of silk tulle was draped with orange blossoms and carried a bouquet of white heart roses and wore the groom's gift, a gold wrist watch. The bridesmaid was Miss Mildred Spring, sister of the groom, and was attired in a dainty frock of Alltyme Crepe and carried a bouquet of Ophelia roses and carnations. The groom was attended by Mr. Lorne Birrell. During the signing of the register Mr. Clayton Bell played very sweetly. The groom's gift to the groomsmen was a pair of gold cuff links, to the bridesmaid a handsome gold pin set with pearls, and to the pianist gold cuff links. Immediately after the ceremony the guests were escorted to the dining room, where a dainty lunch was served, the guests numbering about forty. Amid showers of confetti the happy couple left for Toronto and other points, the bride travelling in a suit of Navy Tricotine, with hat to match. Upon their return they will reside upon a farm near Bath, where the groom is a prosperous young farmer. The beautiful gifts show the high esteem in which the young couple are held.

We want you at Picton Fair, and promise you a good time after you get there. For the Fair, always good, will be better than ever this year. There will be wonderful feats of horsemanship by Riders from the Royal Military Riding School; splendid Horse Races, good Ball Games, Food Races, Bicycle Races, Lady Riders, Trick Horse and Pony, Molly McGuire, the Thoroughbred High Jumper, and other events too numerous to mention. Take in the Fair at Picton, and you will thoroughly enjoy every Moment.

It is a beautiful drive to Picton. Why not take it and visit Picton Fair? It will surely mean a day well spent. You will see and hear much to delight you; Good Music Races, Ball Games, Midway, Exhibits of Horses, Exhibits of Cattle, Exhibit of Poultry, Exhibit of Vegetables, Exhibit of School Work, Exhibit of Fine Arts, and good exhibits of all other lines that go towards the making of a first class Fair. The Royal Canadian Horse Artillery Band of the Permanent Force of Canada will be in attendance all four days and nights, Sept. 19th, 19th, 20th and 21st.

A meeting of the Executive of the Kingston Presbyterial was held at the home of Mrs. Corkill, on Thursday afternoon, Sept. 6th. Those attending from Napanee were Mrs. W. J. Paul, Mrs. Duff, Mrs. R. J. Diack, Mrs. H. Ross, Mrs. J. E. Gow, Miss L. L. Mowat, Mrs. J. Matheson, Mrs. S. E. Revelle. Others present were Mrs. Hain, Gananoque, Mrs. G. A. Reid, Belleville, Mrs. Fargey, Stirling, Mrs. Sharpe, Belleville, Mrs. G. W. Richardson, Tweed, Mrs. Corkill, Napanee. Very encouraging reports were given by the different secretaries, showing increasing progress and enthusiasm in the work carried on by the W.M.S. Especially gratifying was the report of the Supply Secretary, Mrs. Fargey, bales of clothing, weighing 800 pounds, have been sent to the Cecelia Jeffrey School, Manitoba. The value of the perfectly new clothing in these bales was $1009.15. Besides this there was a quantity of second-hand clothing in first class condition. The matter of having pulpit supplies for W.M.S. Sunday was also discussed. The date fixed this year is Sept. 16th, and the Executive hope to have in each church a speaker who will deal particularly with the work of the Women's Missionary Society. Mrs. W. J. Paul, Kingston, the President of the Presbyterial, presided at the meeting.

Pacific Mail Liner Cuba Is Also Wrecked.

U. S. Destroyers Pile on Rocks of San Miguel — Twenty-three Seamen Drowned—Were Steaming In Fog —All Vessels Were Beached Within Few Minutes of First Crash.

SANTA, BARBARA, Cal., Sept. 10. —Seven United States navy destroyers and the Pacific Mail Liner Cuba were wrecked Saturday morning and Saturday night. The navy vessels crashed on the rocks in a dense fog off Arguello Light, 75 miles north of Santa Barbara, and the passenger steamer on a reef off the south end of San Miguel Island, 35 miles off this port.

Twenty-five enlisted men of the destroyers lost their lives in the naval disaster and all the destroyers were reported as total losses.

The Cuba was reported to have sunk during the night, but all passengers and members of her crew either were landed at Los Angeles by the destroyer Reno, or are on their way to San Francisco on board the Standard Oil tanker W. S. Miller, with the exception of Captain C. J. Holland, the purser, steward and eight seamen, who remained on board to guard a shipment of $2,500,000 in silver bullion.

Dence fog was the cause of both disasters.

The destroyers Chauncey, Woodbury, Fuller, Spice, Nicholas, Young and Delphy were all beached within a few minutes of one another, according to naval officers.

The flotilla, of which the wrecked craft formed a part was in command of Captain Edward Watson, commanding officer of the Delphy, and was on a practice cruise.

Of the survivors, fifteen of the seriously injured were brought to the Santa Barbara County Hospital here. One hundred others were cut and bruised in their swim to safety over the jagged rocks. The destroyers were travelling in formation at 20 knots an hour in a heavy sea and dense fog when the leading vessel crashed.

Carried ahead by a strong tide, the others piled on the beach in succession. The boats lay in line along the shore for a mile and a half. One, of them, the Chauncey, was resting high on the rocks.

Only one body had been recovered up till last night when all efforts to obtain the others had been fruitless.

The seas were running so heavy that it was only a few minutes after the crash that all of the destroyers were taking water.

The rescue of most of the crew of the Young was effected when boatswain's mate Peterson took a line overboard and swam with it to the Chauncey, battling the rough sea and strong tides. Peterson reached the Chauncey exhausted.

With the line secured between the two ships, all remaining members of the crew made their way ashore, as the Chauncey was beached on the mainland.

A twist of fate that sent the destroyer Reno, tearing southward at 30 knots an hour to the west of the Channel Islands instead of down the Santa Barbara channel, according to her schedule, saved 96 survivors from the wreck of the Pacific mail liner Cuba from almost certain death at sea, according to the Reno's commander, Lieutenant-Commander J. R. Barry. The Reno, after groping her way southward through the fog banks, reached San Pedro harbor Sunday with the passengers and crew of the wrecked Cubs.

Lost in the fog and headed due west for the open sea in the belief that they were bound for the mainland, two of the Cuba's boats were sighted late Sunday by the Reno as she was speeding through the fog on her annual full power trials. Chance sighting of the first lifeboat through a rift in the fog was all that saved the Cuba's ill-fated passengers, declared Commander Barry.

Ten Barrels of Ale Inside Coffin.

NEW YORK, Sept. 10.—A black hearse rolled through West Fourth street yesterday and drew up before the crepeless door of Fred Kern's cafe at No. 230. Two men alighted, looked around and then got busy.

Back in the cafe, behind a window curtain, sat two revenue officers. A coffin might have fooled them but ten half barrels looked suspicious.

The agents already had arrested Kern and Albert Rottell, his bartender. They then arrested the men on the hearse who said they were Robert J. Byrne and Charles N. Schwartz, both of West New York. The barrels, full of alleged ale, were confiscated.

Pleads Guilty to Charge of Sedition.

WINDSOR, Ont., Sept. 10.—Peter Poposkey, of Ford, who was arrested with several bundles of alleged Bolshevik literature in his possession, entered a plea of guilty to the charge of sedition which was preferred against him by the police of Ford Friday afternoon. When he was arraigned before Magistrate Gundy he stood mute when asked to plead. Saturday he changed his mind and entered a plea of guilty. He is liable to a maximum penalty of 20 years in Kingston Penitentiary.

Little Girl Killed.

MILVERTON, Ont., Sept. 10.—Marie, the five-year-old daughter of Mr. Charles Reis, of Ellice, who resides about five miles south of Milverton, was instantly killed Saturday by falling from a wagon to the ground, breaking her neck.

Provides His First Story.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 10.—Harold M. Andrews, recently appointed correspondent of a local newspaper at Transcona, Man., committed suicide by hanging himself in the room in a transmission line on Saturday. In a note to his wife Andrews said his last act was his first report to the newspaper which employed him.

Plane Stops to Norway Bay.

OTTAWA, Sept. 10.—The Vickers Viking flying boat, which left the Rockliffe airdrome on Friday for Victoria Beach, Lake Winnipeg, was reported last night by officials of the Air Board to have stopped at Norway Bay owing to the unsatisfactory viability. The hydroplane proceeded on Saturday.

BELLROCK.

The farmers are still busy, some threshing and some getting in late crops. The yield of grain in this section is said to be very good.

A very sad event occurred on Monday last when Winston Reynolds, aged 11 years, only son of Zara Reynolds, was accidentally drowned in an old mine pit. Winston will be sadly missed by all who knew him, he had a smile and a friendly word for every one he met.

The village school is opened again under the tuition of Mrs. Earl Martin.

The recent rains have improved the pasturage very much.

Recent visitors: Patrick Timmins, Wilkinson and Gerald Timmins, Kingston, at J. Timmins'; Mrs. E. M. York, Kingston, at J. Pomeroy's, Oak Hill Farm.

STELLA.

The members of Quinte Lodge No. 307, L.O.B.A., Derry Lodge No. 2, P.A.P.B., and of Burleigh, L.O.L. No. 482, attended divine service in St. Alban's church on Sunday, Aug. 26th. During the absence of the rector, Canon W. F. Fitzgerald, of Kingston, had charge of the service.

An ice cream social and dance was held in Victoria Hall on Tuesday evening, Aug. 21st, under the auspices of Derry Lodge, No. 2, P.A.P.B. The Harmony Six orchestra, Kingston, provided excellent music for the dancing.

Quinte Lodge, No. 304, L.O.B.A., held an ice cream social in Victoria Hall on Tuesday evening last. It was well patronized.

Rev. J. C. and Mrs. Dixon are spending a few holidays in Kingston and Toronto.

J. Smith has purchased a new Fordson tractor.

R. H. Howard, Buffalo, N.Y., is at Mrs. J. C. Howard's.

DENBIGH.

Mr. John Perry, of North Bay, paid a short visit to former neighbors and old friends here.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Armstrong, of Kingston, spent a few days here visiting friends and relatives.

Mr. A. Lockwood made a business trip to Napanee and Rev. P. A. Scott enjoyed a visit to his home and family there.

Mr. J. Ryan, Masters Richard and John MacKay and Miss Mary Ann MacKay, of Read, were for a few days welcome guests of Mr. and Mrs. E. Marquardt.

Mr. H. W. Edward, Principal of Denbigh Continuation School, last term, left for Mallorytown, where he has been engaged to teach. He is succeeded here by Miss F. Danford, of Bonarlaw, who taught in part of 1922.

One of our best village properties has changed owners. Mrs. E. Sallans sold her property to Mr. Wm. Slater, of Slate Falls, who has already taken possession and will also assume the position as postmaster, as Mrs. Ready has resigned the position.

Nine farmers and farmer's sons have left this vicinity with the two farmers' excursions for Saskatchewan, to engage in taking care of the harvest there.

Crops in general this year are below the average.

CATTLE MARKETS

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

TORONTO, Sept. 17.—Receipts of cattle at the Union Stock Yards on Tuesday were heavy, at over 4,000 cattle, which, with the leftovers from the previous week, made nearly 5,000 head on sale when the market opened after the Labor Day holiday. There were a few loads of choice heavy animals on sale, and these sold readily at firm prices. The best of the heavy cattle brought $6 to $6.25 per cwt.

Out of the total offerings of the week a good percentage were western, and these being generally of poor finish did not sell readily, except as stockers and feeders.

Demand for cows and bulls was limited, and prices were easier, especially the medium and common classes, were slow and inclined to be easy, with declines of 50c per cwt., being reported. Good butcher cows brought $4 to $5, with canners and cutters at $3 to $3. There were few bulls of export quality on sale, some being taken at $4 to $4.75, with common bologna at $3.50 to $4.

Shipments of sheep and lambs were heavier than the week previous, and prices were easier at $1.50 per cwt., the market for ewes and wethers closed at $12, with bucks at $10.50.

Lambs declined $1 per cwt., Tuesday, but on Wednesday packers were able to get into the car at $14 per cwt., with thick smooth selling at $13.50, and well watered, down on the week.

Receipts for to-day's market at the Union Yards were 124 cars: Cattle, 1,185; calves, 545; hogs, 2,215; sheep, 1,600.

BUFFALO LIVE STOCK.

Bee Cause of an Accident.

STRATFORD, Ont., Sept. 10.—The entry of a bee into the car driven by Herbert Galbraith, of this city on the highway near the village of Sebringville at noon Sunday, was the cause of an accident in which Mr. Galbraith's boy had his collarbone broken. The door of the car had been opened in chasing the bee out and in motioning someone in the car near to close the door, Mr. Galbraith turned the car into the ditch, where it turned over completely. Seven occupants were badly shaken up, the only injury being that received by the boy.

Search for St. Catharines Girl.

ST. CATHARINES, Ont., Sept. 10. —Myrtle Hoover, 14 years old, was reported Saturday as missing from the home of Mrs. P. N. Thompson, Haynes avenue, since Wednesday last, and friends in the city and in Thorold are conducting a search for her whereabouts. The girl's parents live near Owen Sound, and it is thought that her objections to returning to school and a desire to earn some money for herself prompted her departure.

ENDING OF COAL STRIKE.

Trying to Save Consumers Extra Cost on Anthracite.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Sept. 10.—Representatives of anthracite operators and miners Saturday night agreed upon the terms of a proposed new two-year wage contract. The union scale committee immediately approved the terms and fixed September 17 as the date for a tri-district convention at Scranton, at which it will be submitted for ratification by the miners.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Sept. 10.—Having, by his proposals, paved the way for the ending of the coal strike, Governor Pinchot yesterday took steps which he believes will result in preventing anthracite users from being forced to pay the added cost of the 10 per cent. increase in miners' wages and the eight-hour day agreed on by the representatives of the operators and miners. The Governor has made known his plan in a letter to President Coolidge.

Stating that he was preparing to invite the Governors of all anthracite-consuming states to take up local margins and profits of wholesalers, brokers, jobbers and retailers, and that he would ask the Pennsylvania Public Service Commission to reconsider the reasonableness of all freight rates on anthracite, Governor Pinchot suggested that the Interstate Commerce Commission should consider a new anthracite freight rate, and that the United States Coal Commission make public its findings on profits and costs of mine operations and wholesale and retail distribution.

WHAT BECOMES OF THE MILK BOTTLES.

They were standing on the front stoop and she was ready to depart. She fondled his hand and then held it tightly for a moment. Gazing into her deep blue eyes he begged her for a farewell kiss, and blushing, she consented provided he would keep it quiet. He leaned forward, perhaps a bit too anxious. Alas, he had done it! Kissed her? No, kicked over three empty milk bottles.

The New OVERLAND Blue Bird

Has won Immediate Public Favor

Never before in Canada has a car had such a reception. The Blue Bird has stepped into immediate popularity—and rightly.

For this new Overland is not only the most satisfying Overland ever produced—but we believe it represents value that nothing on wheels can approach.

Powered with the same motor that won such fame for the Overlands of last year, the new car is much roomier—with 106-inch wheel base and ample leg-room.

The doors are full 23 inches in width, the seats are wide; the cushions deep; the appointments rich and complete in every detail; cord tires all round; barrel headlights. The ingenious Triplex Springs kill jolt, jounce and side sway.

The REFUGEES

By A. CONAN DOYLE, Author of "The Return of Sherlock Holmes"

Copyright, 1922, by Harper & Brothers

"Oh, father, you ask too much. The king would never consent to such a proposal."

"It is he that will propose it."

"And why?"

"Because we shall force him to. It is only thus that all opposition can be stopped. When it is done the court will accept it. Until it is done they will resist it."

"What would you have me do, then, father?"

"Resign the king."

"Resign him!" She turned as pale as a lily.

"It is the best course, madame."

"Ah, father, I might have done it last month, last week, even yesterday morning."

"Fear not, madame. We advise you for the best. Go to the king now, at once. Say to him that you have heard that he has been subjected to much annoyance upon your account, that you cannot bear to think that you should be a cause of dissension in his own family and that therefore you will release him from his promise and will withdraw yourself from the court forever."

She cast a light mantle about her shoulders.

"I follow your advice," she said. "I believe that you are wiser than I. But, oh, if he should take me at my word."

"He will not take you at your word."

The king had remained alone in his cabinet, wrapped in somewhat gloomy thoughts. Suddenly there came a gentle tap at the door, and there was the woman who was in his thoughts standing in the twilight before him. He sprang to his feet and held out his hands with a smile.

"Francoise! You here? Then I have at last a welcome visitor, and it is the first one today."

"Sire, I fear that you have been troubled."

"I have indeed, Francoise."

"But I have a remedy for it."

"And what is that?"

"I shall leave the court, sire, and you shall think no more of what has passed between us. I have brought a closed litter where I meant to bring peace. Let me retire to St. Cyr or to the Abbey of Fontevrault, and you will no longer be called upon to make such sacrifices for my sake."

The king turned deathly pale and clutched at her shawl with a trembling hand, as though he feared that she was about to put her resolution into effect that very instant.

"No, no, Francoise, you must not leave me! You must stay with me and be my wife." He could hardly speak for agitation, and he still grasped at her dress to detain her.

"Some one must escape before our wedding, sire. Yet during all that interval you will be exposed to these annoyances. How can I be happy when I feel that I have brought upon you so long a period of discomfort? A day would be too long, sire, for you to be unhappy through my fault. It is a misery to me to think of it. Believe me, it would be better that I should leave you."

"Never! You shall not! Why should we even wait a day, Francoise? I am ready. You are ready. Why should we not be married now?"

"At once? Oh, sire!"

"We shall. It is my wish. It is my order. That is my answer to those who would drive me. Let it be done secretly, Francoise. I will send in a trusty messenger this very night for the archbishop of Paris, and I swear that if all France stand in the way he shall make us man and wife before he departs."

"Is it your will, sire?"

"It is, and, sh, I can see by your eyes that it is yours also! We shall not lose a moment, Francoise. What a blessed thought of mine, which will silence their tongues forever! Why it is ready they may know, but not before."

The king was all on fire with the excitement of this new resolution. He had cast his air of doubt and discontent, and he paced swiftly about the room with a smiling face and shining eyes; then he touched a small gold bell, to which summoned Bontems, his private body servant.

"What o'clock is it, Bontems?"

"It is nearly 6, sire."

"Hum!" The king considered for some moments.

"Do you know where Captain de Catinat is, Bontems?"

"He was in the grounds, sire, but I heard that he would ride back to Paris tonight."

"Does he ride alone?"

"He has one friend with him."

"Who is this friend—an officer of the guards?"

"No, sire; it is a stranger from over the seas—from America, as I understand—who has stayed with him of late."

"A stranger! So much the better. Go, Bontems, and bring them both to me."

"I trust that they have not started, sire. I will see." He hurried off and was back in ten minutes in the cabinet once more.

"Well?"

"I have been fortunate, sire. Their horses had been led out and their feet were in the stirrups when I reached them."

"Where are they, then?"

"They await your majesty's orders in the anteroom."

"Show them in, Bontems, and give admission to none, not even to the minister, until they have left me."

To De Catinat an audience with the monarch was a common incident of his duties, but it was with profound astonishment that he learned from Bontems that his friend and companion was included in the order.

It was with a feeling of curiosity, not unmixed with awe, that Amos Green entered the private chamber of the greatest monarch in Christendom. As his eyes fell upon a quietly dressed, bright eyed man, half a head shorter than himself, with a trim, dapper figure and an erect carriage, he could not help glancing round the room to see if this were indeed the monarch or if it were some other of those endless officials who interposed themselves between him and the outer world. The reverent salute of his companion, however, showed him that this must indeed be the king, so he bowed, and then drew himself erect with the simple dignity of a man who had been trained in nature's school.

"You must stay with me and be my wife."

"Your friend, as I understand, is a stranger to this country. I trust, sir, that you have found something here to interest and to amuse you?"

"Yes, your majesty. I have seen your great city, and it is a wonderful one. And my friend has shown me this palace, with its woods and its grounds. When I go back to my own country I will have much to say of what I have seen in your beautiful land."

"You speak French, and yet you are not a Canadian."

"No, sire; I am from the English provinces."

The king looked with interest at the powerful figure, the bold features and the free bearing of the young foreigner, and his mind dashed back to the dangers which the Comte de Frontenac had foretold from these same colonies. His mind, however, ran at present on other things than statecraft, and he hastened to give De Catinat his orders for the night.

"You will ride into Paris on my service. Your friend can go with you. Two are safer than one when they bear a message of state. I wish you, however, to wait until nightfall before you start."

"Yes, sire."

"Let me know your errand and see that none follow you. Go to the house of Archbishop Harlay, prelate of Paris, and bid him drive out hither and be at the northwest side postern by midnight. Let nothing hold him back. Storm or fine, he must be here tonight. It is of the first importance. Adieu, captain. Adieu, monsieur."

CHAPTER X.

MME. DE MONTESPAN still kept her rooms, uneasy in mind at the king's disappearance, but unwilling to show her anxiety to the court by appearing among them or by making any inquiries as to what had occurred. While she thus remained in ignorance of the sudden and complete collapse of her fortunes, she had one active and energetic agent who had lost no incident of what had occurred and who watched her interests with as much zeal as if they were his own. And indeed they were his own, for her friend, the Duc de Vonne, had gained everything for which he yearned—money, lands and preferment—through his sister's notoriety. By nature bold, unscrupulous and resourceful, he was not a man to leave the game without playing it out to the very end. Keenly alert to all that passed, he had from the time that he first heard the rumor of the king's intrigue haunted the antechamber and drawn his own conclusions from what he had seen. Nothing had escaped him—the disconsolate faces of monsieur and of the dauphin, the visit of Pere la Chaise and Bossuet to the lady's room, her return, the triumph which shone in her eyes as she came away from the interview. He had seen Bontems hurry off and summon the guardsmen and his friend. He had heard them order their horses to be brought out in a couple of hours' time, and finally from a spy whom he employed among the servants he learned that an unwonted bustle was going forward in Mme. de Maintenon's room, that Mlle. Nanon was half wild with excitement and that two court milliners had been hastily summoned to madame's apartment. It was only, however, when he heard from the same servant that a chamber was to be prepared for the reception that night of the archbishop of Paris that he understood how urgent was the danger.

Mme. de Montespan had spent the evening stretched upon a sofa in the worst possible humor with every one around her. There was the sound of an opening door and of a quick step in her antercom. Was it the king, or at least his messenger with a note from him?

But, no; it was her brother, with the haggard eyes and drawn face of a man who is weighed down with his own evil doings. He turned as he entered, fastened the door and then, striding across the room, locked the other one which led to her boudoir.

"We are safe from interruption," he panted. "I have listened here, for every second may be invaluable. Have you heard anything from the king?"

"Nothing." She had sprung to her feet.

"The hour has come for action, Francoise."

"What is it?"

"The king is about to marry Mme. de Maintenon."

"The gouvernante! The widow Scarron! It is impossible!"

"It is certain that he will marry her."

The woman flung out her hands in a gesture of contempt and laughed loud and bitterly.

"You are easily frightened, brother," said she. "Ah, you do not know your little sister. Perchance if you were not my brother you might rate my powers more highly. One day is all I ask to bring him back."

"But you cannot have it. The marriage is tonight."

"You are mad, Charles."

"I am certain of it. In a few broken sentences he shot out all that he had seen and heard. She listened with a grim face and hands which closed ever tighter and tighter as he proceeded.

"I shall go and see him," she cried, sweeping toward the door.

"No, no, Francoise. Believe me, you will ruin everything if you do. Strict orders have been given to the guard to admit no one to the king."

"Had I only a day, Charles, I am sure that I could bring him back to me. There has been some other influence here—that meddlesome Jesuit or the pompous Bossuet, perhaps. Only one day to counteract their wiles. Charles, it must be stopped; I say it must be stopped! I will give anything, everything, to prevent it!"

"What will you give, my sister?"

She looked at him aghast. "What! You do not wish me to buy you?" she said.

"No, but I wish to buy others."

"Ha! You see a chance, then!"

"One, and one only. But time presses. I want money."

"How much?"

"I cannot have too much—all that you can spare."

With hands which trembled with eagerness she unlocked a secret cupboard in the wall in which she concealed her valuables. A blaze of jewelry met her brother's eyes as he peered over her shoulder. At one side were three drawers, the one over the other. She drew out the lowest one. It was full to the brim with glittering louis d'ors.

"Take what you will!" she said. "And now your plan! Quick!"

He stuffed the money in handfuls into the side pockets of his coat. Coins slipped between his fingers and tinkled and wheeled over the floor, but neither cast a glance at them.

"Your plan?" she repeated.

"We must prevent the archbishop from arriving here. Then the marriage would be postponed until tomorrow night."

"But how prevent it?"

"There are a dozen good rapiers about the court which are to be bought for less than I carry in one pocket. I will gather them together and wait on the road."

"And waylay the archbishop?"

"No; the messengers."

"Oh, excellent! You are a prince of brothers! If no message reach Paris we are saved. Go; go; do not lose a moment."

"It is very well, Francoise, but what are we to do with them when we get them? We may lose our heads over the matter, it seems to me. After all, they are the king's messengers, and we can scarce pass our swords through them."

"No?"

"There would be no forgiveness for that."

"But consider that before the matter is looked into I shall have regained my influence with the king."

"All very fine, my little sister, but how long is your influence to last? A pleasant life for us if at every change of favor they have to fly the country! No, no, Francoise; the most that we can do is to detain the messengers."

"Where can you detain them?"

"I have thought of that. There is the castle of the Marquis de Montespan at Pertilac."

"Of my husband—of my most bitter enemy! Oh, Charles, you are not serious."

"On the contrary, I was never more so. The marquis was away in Paris yesterday and has not yet returned. Where is the ring with his arms?"

She hunted among her jewels and picked out a gold ring with a broad engraved face.

"This will be key. When Jean Marceau, the steward, sees it, every dungeon in the castle will be at our disposal. It is that or nothing. There is no other place where we can hold them safe."

"But when my husband returns?"

"Ah, he may be a little puzzled as to his captives. And the complaisant Marceau may have an evil quarter of an hour. But that may not be for a week, and by that time, my little sister, I have confidence enough in you to think that you really may have finished the campaign." He took her fondly in his arms, kissed her and then hurried from the room.

For hours after his departure she paced up and down with noiseless steps upon the deep, soft carpet, her hands still clinched, her eyes flaming, her whole soul wrapped and consumed with jealousy and hatred of her rival. Ten struck, and 11, and midnight, but still she waited, fierce and eager, straining her ears for every footfall which might be the herald of news. At last it came. She heard the quick step in the passage, the tap at the antercom door and the whispering of her page. Quivering with impatience, she rushed in and took the note herself from the dusty cavalier who had brought it. It was but six words scrawled roughly upon a wisp of dirty paper. It was her brother's writing, and it ran, "The archbishop will not come tonight."

CHAPTER XI.

DE CATINAT in the meanwhile was perfectly aware of the importance of the mission which had been assigned to him. He knew enough of the intrigues and antagonisms with which the court was full to understand that every precaution was necessary in carrying out his instructions. He waited, therefore, until night had fallen before ordering his soldier-servant to bring round the two horses to one of the less public gates of the grounds. As he and his friend walked together to the spot he gave the young American a rapid sketch of the situation at the court and of the chance that the nocturnal ride might be an event which would affect the future history of France.

"Are you armed?" he asked. "You have no sword or pistols?"

"No; if I may not carry my gun I had rather not be troubled by tools that I have never learned to use. I have my knife. But why do you ask?"

"Because there may be danger. Many have an interest in stopping this marriage, and the first item of the kingdom are bitterly against it. If they could stop us, they would stop it, for tonight at least."

"But I thought it was secret."

"There is no such thing at a court. There is the dauphin or the king's brother. Either of them or any of their friends would be right glad that we should be in the Seine before we reached the archbishop's house this night. But who is this?"

A burly figure had loomed up through the gloom, the path upon which they were going. As it approached, a colored lamp dangling from one of the trees shone upon the blue and silver of an officer of the guards. It was Major de Brissac of De Catinat's own regiment.

"Hello! Whither away?" he asked.

"To Paris, major."

"I go there myself within an hour. Will you not wait, that we may go together?"

"I am sorry, but I ride on a matter of urgency."

"Very good. Good night, and a pleasant ride."

"Is he a trusty man, our friend the major?" asked Amos Green, glancing back.

"True as steel."

"Then I would have a word with him." The American hurried back along the way they had come, while De Catinat stood chafing at this unnecessary delay. It was a full five minutes before his companion joined him, and the fiery blood of the French soldier was hot with impatience.

"I think that perhaps you had best ride into Paris at your leisure, my friend," said he, "if I go upon the king's service I cannot be delayed whenever the whim takes you."

"I am sorry," answered the other quietly. "I had something to say to your major, and I thought that maybe I might not see him again."

"Well, well, get on horses," said the guardsman as he pushed open the postern gate. "Have you fed and watered them, Jaques?"

"Yes, my captain," answered the man.

"Then saddle, then, friend Green, and we shall not draw rein again until we see the lights of Paris."

For a mile or more the comrades galloped along. The road was very dark, and it was hard but for the loom upon either side to tell where it lay. De Catinat at least found it so, and he peered anxiously over his horse's ears and bent his face to the mane in his efforts to see his way.

"What do you make of the road?" he asked at last.

"It looks as if a good many carriage wheels had passed over it today."

"What! Mon Dieu! Do you mean to say that you can see carriage wheels there?"

"Certainly. Why not?"

"Why, man, I cannot see the road at all."

Amos Green laughed heartily. "When you have traveled in the woods by night as often as I have," said he, "when to show a light may mean to lose your hair, one comes to learn to use one's eyes."

"Then you had best ride on, and I shall keep just behind you. So! Hola! What is the matter now?"

There had been the sudden sharp snap of something breaking, and the American had reeled for an instant in the saddle.

"It's one of my stirrup leathers. It has fallen."

"Can you find it?"

"Yes, but I can ride as well without it. Let me push on."

"Very good. I can just see you now."

They had galloped for about five minutes in this fashion, De Catinat's horse's head within a few feet of the other's tail, when there was a second snap, and the guardsman rolled out of the saddle on to the ground. He kept his grip of the reins, however, and was up in an instant at his horse's head.

She hunted among her jewels and picked out a gold ring with a broad engraved face.

"This will be our key. When Jean Marceau, the steward, sees it, every dungeon in the castle will be at our disposal. It is that or nothing. There is no other place where we can hold them safe."

THE FLAVOR LASTS

"A thousand thunders of heaven!" he cried. "What was it that happened then?"

"Your leather has gone too."

"Two stirrup leathers in five minutes?"

"It is not possible that it should be so, Captain," said the American gravely, shaking himself off his horse. "Why, what is this? My other leather is cut."

"And so is mine. I can feel it when I pass my hand along. Have you a tinder box? Let us strike a light."

"No, no; the man who is in the dark is in safety. I let my enemy strike lights."

"My rein is cut also."

"And so is mine."

"And the girth of my saddle."

"It is a wonder that we came so far with whole bones. Now, who has played us this little trick?"

"Who could it be but that rogue Jaques? He has had the horses in his charge. By my faith, he shall know what the strappado means when I see Versailles again."

"But why should he do it?"

"Ah, he has been set on to it. He has been a tool in the hands of those who wished to hinder our journey."

"Very likely. But they must have had some reason behind. They knew well that to cut our straps would not prevent us from reaching Paris, since we could ride bareback or, for that matter, run. What is their game?"

"They hoped to break our necks."

"One neck they might break, but scarce those of two. They could not have thought to stop us. What did they mean, then? They could only have meant to delay us. And why should they wish to delay us?"

"For heaven's sake"— broke in De Catinat impatiently.

"Why should they wish to delay us, then? There's only one reason that I can see—in order to give other folk time to get in front of us and stop us. That is it, captain. I'd lay you a golden skin to a rabbit's pelt that I'm on the track. There's been a party of a dozen horsemen along this ground since the dew began to fall. If we were about we could have time to form their plans before we came."

"By my faith, you may be right," said De Catinat thoughtfully. "What would you propose?"

"That we ride back, and go by some less direct way."

"It is impossible. We should have to ride back to the Meudon crossroads, and then it would add ten miles to our journey. We are surely not to be turned from our path by a mere guess. There is the St. Germain crossroad about a mile below. When we reach it we can strike to the right along the south side of the river and so change our course."

They mounted and rode on. Suddenly De Catinat's eye caught something in the dim light which thought a mile to his face. Away in front of them, between two dark tree clumps, lay a vast number of shimmering, glittering yellow points, as thick as flowers in a garden. They were the lights of Paris.

"See!" he cried, pointing. "There is the city, and close here must be the St. Germain road. We shall take it. It is so to avoid any danger."

"Very good! But I should not ride too fast, when your girth may break at any moment."

"Nay, come on. We are close to our journey's end. The St. Germain road opens just round this corner, and then we shall see our way, for the lights will guide us."

He cut his horse with his whip, and the two galloped together round the curve. Next instant they were both down in one wild heap of tossing heads and struggling hoofs. De Catinat partly covered by his horse, and his comrade hurled twenty paces, where he lay silent and motionless in the center of the road.

M. de Vivonne had laid his ambuscade with discretion. With a closed carriage and a band of chosen ruffians he had left the palace a good half hour before the king's messengers. On reaching the branch road he had ordered the coachman to drive some little distance along it and had tethered all the horses to a fence under his charge. He had then stationed one of the band as a sentinel some distance up the main highway to flash a light when the two couriers were approaching. A stout cord had been fastened eighteen inches from the ground to the trunk of a wayside sapling, and on receiving the signal the other end was tied to a gatepost upon the farther side. The two cutlers could not possibly see it, coming as it did on the very curve of the road, and as a consequence their horses fell heavily to the ground and brought them down with them. In an instant the dozen ruffians, who had lurked in the shadow of the trees, sprang out upon them, sword in hand, but there was no movement from either of their victims.

M. de Vivonne lit a lantern and flashed it upon the faces of the two unconscious men. "This is bad business, Major Despard," said he to the man next him. "I believe that they are both gone."

"Tut, tut! By my soul, men did not die like that when I was young!" answered the other, leaning forward his fierce, bristled face into the light of the lantern. "Pass your rapier under the third rib of the horses. De la Touche. They will never be fit to set hoof to ground again."

Two sobbing groans and the thud of their straining necks falling back to earth told that the two steeds had come to the end of their troubles.

"Where is Achille Latour?" asked De Vivonne. "He has studied medicine at Montpellier."

"Here I am, your excellency. It is not for me to boast, but I am as handy a man with a lancet as with a rapier. Which would you have me look to?"

The trooper bent over Amos Green. "He is not long for this world," said

he. "Methinks that it were well for me to pass my dagger through his throat."

"Not for your life!" cried the leader. "If he die without wound, they cannot lay it to our charge. Turn now to the other."

The man bent over De Catinat and placed his hand upon his heart. As he did so the soldier heaved a long sigh, opened his eyes and gazed about him with the face of one who knows neither where he is nor how he came there. De Vivonne, who had drawn his hat down over his eyes and muffled the lower part of his face in his mantle, took out his flask and poured a little of the contentsglown the injured man's throat. In an instant a dash of color had come back into the gentleman's bloodless cheeks and the light of memory into his eyes. He struggled up on to his feet and strove furiously to push away those who held him. But his head still swam, and he could scarce hold himself erect.

"I insist to Paris," he gasped. "I must to Paris. It is the king's mission. You stop me at your peril."

"He has no hurt save a scratch," said the ex-doctor.

"Then bind him fast. And first carry the dying man to the carriage."

The lantern threw but a small ring of yellow light, so that when it had been carried over to De Catinat Amos Green was left lying in the shadow. Now they brought the light back to where the young man lay. But there was no sign of him. He was gone.

De Vivonne caught the false doctor by the throat and, hurling him down, would have choked him upon the spot had the others not dragged them apart.

"You lying dog!" he cried. "Is this your skill? The man has fled, and we are ruined!"

"He had done it in his death struggle!" gasped the other hoarsely. "He cannot be far off."

"That is true. He cannot be far off," cried De Vivonne. "He has neither horse nor arms. You, Despard and Raymond de Carnac, guard the other, that he play us no trick. Do you, La Touche, and you, Thierville, ride down the road and wait by the south gate. If he enter Paris at all he must come in that way. If you get him, tie him before you on your horse and bring him to the rendezvous. In any case, it matters little, for he is a stranger, this fellow, and only here by chance."

The two horsemen rode off in pursuit of the fugitive, and De Catinat, still struggling desperately to escape, was dragged down the St. Germain road and thrust into the carriage, which had waited at some distance while these incidents were being enacted. Three of the horsemen rode ahead, the coachman was curtly ordered to follow them, and De Vivonne, having dispatched one of the band with a note to his sister, followed after the coach with the remainder of his desperadoes.

The unfortunate guardsman had now entirely recovered his senses and found himself with a strap round his ankles and another round his wrists, a captive inside a moving prison which lumbered heavily along the country road. He had been stunned by the shock of his fall, and his leg was badly bruised by the weight of his horse. His mind, however, pained him more than his body. He sank his head into his pinioned hands and stamped madly with his feet, rocking himself to and fro in his despair. What a fool, a treble fool, he had been! He, an old soldier, who had seen something of war, to walk with open eyes into such a trap!

But then came a return of that common sense which lies so very closely beneath the impetuosity of the Celt.

WILSON'S FLY PADS

Kill them all, and the germs too. 10c a packet at Druggists, Grocers and General Stores.

The matter was done now, and he must see if it could not be mended. Amos Green had escaped. That was one grand point in his favor. At least Amos Green had heard the king's message and realized its importance. It was true that he knew nothing of Paris, but surely a man who could pick his way at night through the forests of Maine would not be balked in finding so well known a house as that of the archbishop of Paris.

And then the thought of escape occurred to his mind. Might he not even now be in time perhaps to carry his own message? Who were these men who had seized him? And where were they taking him to? Full of curiosity, he peered out of the windows.

Divers Locate Wreck.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—Salvage experts have at last succeeded in locating the whereabouts of the wreck of the P. & O. liner Egypt, which went down on May 21, 1922, after having been in collision with the French steamer Seine off Ushant. The wreck has been found six miles from the scene of the accident, at a depth of 64 fathoms.

The underwriters have accepted the experts' terms for an attempt to recover the gold ingots which the Egypt was carrying, and which at present rates are estimated to be worth £10,000,000. Later an attempt may be made to refloat the vessel itself.

ONTARIO DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND DOMINION LIVE STOCK BRANCH.

ONTARIO BOYS' AND GIRL'S PIG CLUBS

MEMBERS OF CENTREVILLE PIG CLUB, 1923

OBJECTS

1. To stimulate greater interest in swine raising amongst boys and girls and to develop a more general knowledge of swine marketing methods in Ontario.

2. To give boys and girls practical instruction in swine judging. So that they may obtain a sufficient knowledge of the desirable market type to enable them to select breeding stock intelligently.

3. To develop the community principle of breeding swine.

4. To demonstrate the value of producing a superior type of hog and marketing it to the best advantage.

5. To create a closer study of production costs and bring about improved methods of feeding and management.

RULES

1. Club Members may be boys or girls and must be twelve to eighteen years of age.

2. Club members must enter not less than two, nor more than six hogs.

3. These pigs must be owned and fed by members of the Club for at least three months previous to date of Centreville Fair, September 15th.

4. Hogs must be within bacon weights, 170-220 lbs., at time of marketing which will be during the week of October 8th.

5. Members must select the two best bacon pigs and exhibit them in a wagon box at Centreville Fair on September 15th.

6. Parents or guardians of the members of the Club must be members of the Addington Agricultural Society.

PRIZES

1st $10.00 ; 2nd $9.00 ; 3rd $8.00 ; 4th $7.00 ; 5th $6.00 ; 6th $5.00 ; 7th $4.00 ; 8th $3.00 ; 9th $2.00 ; 10th $1.00, and $1.00 for each succeeding entry.

The Addington Agricultural Society donated $40.00 and the Dominion Live Stock Branch $20.00 for the above prizes.

MANUFACTURERS MAY EXHIBIT BY BECOMING MEMBERS OF THE SOCIETY, BUT NO PRIZES WILL BE GIVEN.

HANDLING THE HARROW

An Implement Often Neglected By Farmers.

Smoothing, Disc, and Spring Tooth Harrows Described—Keep the Bolts Tight and the Wearing Parts Clean—The Implement Shed.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

The iron smoothing harrow, being a rather clumsy implement to handle, is apt to be neglected to the extent of bolts working loose and teeth falling out. A small wrench should always be at hand, preferably strapped to the adjusting lever, with which all bolts could be tightened and kept in proper adjustment. The teeth should be kept sharpened if the harrow is to do its best work with the least expenditure of horse or tractor labor. The harrow sections should be tested for uniformity of set frequently, by lining up the teeth and seeing that all are cutting the same depth. Long, short, crooked or dull teeth reduce the efficiency of this implement. When not in use the harrow should be piled in sections out of harm's way. A storing away after seeding is a good practice to daub a little machine oil or grease on the bright portion of each tooth, using a brush or cloth to do so. If any parts, such as bolts or teeth have been lost, make note of it on a card, tying the card to the section so that repairs will be on hand before the harrow is required for use again. The rusty harrow tooth will ball up, collecting grass roots and will gradually in short time, reducing the efficiency of the work. It pays well to keep the harrow teeth bright and sharp. The place to put the implement is where such will be out of the way is up on the side walls. Long pegs or spikes that will hold the sections can be driven in the studs or wall boarding, and the harrow sections hung thereon high, dry and easy to get when wanted.

This harrow rarely suffers more from neglect to oil than any other farm implement. Lifting and dropping the soil on its own spring, it has been difficult for manufacturers to make a bearing that is dust or sand proof. Frequent and careful oiling right from the start is the only practice that will save the bearings of the disc. If the bearings become loose or worn, the draft is greatly increased and the soil not as well done. The oil can should always be at hand and oil should be applied every hour. A 16-inch disc will turn 660 times an hour at ordinary field speed with considerable pressure from two directions on the bearings. Oil can not be expected to last very long, and if does not, so oil often or your disc will squeak and the horse tire. This implement must be kept tight if it is to do its best work. The wrench should always be on hand and used when needed. If the discs are free from rust, well burnished and smooth, they will not be apt to clog. The rusty disc may cause long delays in the early spring. The discs should be dry and clean when put away, and a little rub with a soft cloth impregnated with machine oil will keep the wearing parts bright and always ready for the field.

The Spring Tooth Harrow.

The spring tooth harrow is an easier implement to keep in order than the disc harrow. With large wheels twice a day oiling will suffice. The keeping of the bolts tight and the wearing surfaces clean and bright are the principal needs leading to efficient working of this implement. Steel points must be renewed or sharpened when required. The wearing parts should be kept bright and clean, and is best accomplished by rubbing with a dry cloth and then following with an oil soaked one. The moving parts in the elevating mechanism require and should get sufficient lubricant to keep them in condition to move freely. Both shelter and painting when needed to protect the iron and wood parts and keep the wheels tight are very essential to long and useful life of this implement. — L. Stevenson, O. A. C., Guelph.

Flushing Sows.

Flushing even at breeding time to increase the number of twin is an ancient practice among sheepmen, but not till recent years have swine raisers paid much attention to this practice. Prof. Edward, of the Iowa Experiment Station, has been investigating its practicability with pigs, and reports that the sows making the most rapid gain at the time of breeding, produced on the average 2.1 pigs more per litter than those making the slowest gain. Another practical conclusion reached as the result of this same set of observations is that if large litters are looked for, it is well not to breed the sow until the first period in heat after weaning, when two litters are raised in one year.

An extra gallon of gas carried in a can or bottle under the back seat of your car will save you a walk some day.

WHERE SEA BIRDS ARE SAFE.

Wild Creatures Congregate on Rock on the Coast of Scotland.

"It certainly is the most wonderful citadel I ever looked upon. Its sides rise straight from the sea, and if you placed St. Paul's cathedral by its side the cross would only just top the cliff," writes an ornithologist.

Every available ledge on this towering rock contains its bird.

In the past the Bass rock, in the Firth of Forth, had been a famous fortress, holding out for years against an attacking army. Now it is a sea birds' citadel, and there they are safe on the impregnable cliffs.

If you look at the scene from below, it is even more wonderful than looking down on the birds from above. There are thousands of the giant birds sailing around, crossing and recrossing in what looks like a great network of living creatures.

One moment there is silence, and that is the most beautiful moment of all, for it is like a scene from fairyland, with dream wings floating above you. The next moment a garnet utters its harsh note, and a thousand birds reply until there is a deafening chorus. Then again there is no sound save the wash of the waves at the base of the cliffs.—London Mail.

THE LONESOME WOMAN

"No Chance to Exercise My Tongue," Is Her Plaint.

Was This Farmer's Wife Correct?—Is There Any Respite From Monotony in the Life of Rural Women?—What Is the Panacea for Farm Loneliness?—Handling Cream for Butter.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

I called at a farm home one day in search of water for an overheated motor. Rapping gently on the kitchen door, I was met by the good lady of the house.

"May I have a pail of water?" I asked.

"You may," she said, handing me a pail and pointing to the pump. I noticed that her index finger and her chin seemed to work in unison when she indicated the direction of the pump.

"Shrewd old girl," I thought, as the water flowed into the pail. "I will try and draw her out. I wonder how she gets in the time. What is she thinking about anyway?"

A Farm Woman's View of the Quiet Life.

After filling the radiator with the clear, cold water, I returned to the door with the borrowed pail. No need of rapping this time. She met me with a kindly smile.

"You have a nice farm here," I said. "You must have a nice quiet life in the country where everything about you is just plain wholesome nature."

"Quiet life!" she said with some emphasis. "Just plain nature!" "You just can get as much of that as you want to get away from it all, and be natural."

Somewhat surprised at her expressions, especially the "be natural," I had always thought that if there was any place where a person could be natural it was on the farm.

The Monotony of Farm Living.

I asked, "Why do you want to get away?"

She replied, "We have no life here. My husband and I get up at five o'clock every morning. He at once goes to the barns to feed the stock, while I get the breakfast and attend to the poultry. We hurry through breakfast, and then he rushes away to the barn or fields, returning at noon for one half hour in which to get his dinner. After dinner he is away again until supper time, when he returns tired from work in the fields, pretty well worn by the long monotonous hours of heavy labor. As for me, why, I attend the house work. Yes, I attend the house work in silence all day long, and that is what gets me. I do not hear the sound of another voice from one day's end to another. No woman to talk to, no neighbor handy to run over and could only get a chat. No chance to exercise my tongue.

Farm Women Fed Up With Silence.

"We farm women get fed up with so much silence. It is somewhat different with the men, they are working with animals and do not feel the loneliness as we women do. Once a week in Napanee on Saturday for we men to get together. Being kept apart so long is it any wonder that our tongues wag at both ends when an opportunity to talk does come."

Is There a Panacea for Rural Loneliness?

After hearing that little sermonette, I unconsciously started for the car intent I had left standing on the roadway. Coming to my senses after a time, I began to think, just what there was in what the lady of the farm had said to me, and repeated to myself her words, "No chance to exercise my tongue, so much silence."

Perhaps, after all, the farm is too lonely a place for the average woman of to-day, and with the trend of modern living it will be a more convenient place in the future unless something happens to change ideas and ideals.

Handle Cream for Butter Carefully.

Cream may be a little sour, but, if it is clean and free from foreign odors and tastes, it will make fancy butter in the hands of an expert buttermaker. Cream approaching rancidity and carrying with it particles of dirt, whiffs of undesirable odors, and a taste of the barnyard or cellar never loses its identity. The butter it enters into is that which drags on the market and sells at a low price. We argue that because certain neighbors are careless with their cream it provides a reason why no one needs to be careful is illogical. Produce the handle your cream in a careful, cleanly manner, deliver it frequently and then demand a price in keeping with the quality.

The Implement Shed.

Shelter for tools and implements is absolutely necessary during the period when such are not in actual use. The weathering elements will soon destroy the wood or metal used in implements, perhaps not fast enough to excite the indolent man into action, but nevertheless, slow, sure and steadily the wood will decay and the metal will rust, until the implement becomes too weak to stand the strain of use. A good roof over a floor that is always dry, and amply large for the implement and tool storage requirement of the farm is all that is needed. A palatial building is not needed. Posts set in cement, a frame strong enough to support roof and walls is all that is required of a special building must be erected.—L. Stevenson, O. A. C., Guelph.

Orchard May Be Pruned In Winter.

Fruit growers do not need to wait until spring to prune their orchards. There is little or no difference in the growth and maturity of the wood where pruning has been done any time between November and May.

If the usual care is taken to make the cuts close to the main trunk or branches, no stubs will be left to die and decay, though the covering of wounds with a white lead and oil paint or with common grafting wax warmed to the consistency of cold molasses will give added protection.

The boy and girl should be made to see that they are a main factor in the maintenance of a farm, and not a slave or servant to do little errands for the parents.

MARY'S FIRST ROLES.

Famous Movie Actress Recalls Her Youth in Toronto.

"I would still be in Toronto, married to some prominent young professional man," is the supposition regarding herself by Mary Pickford, if her father, with his ideas of women's freedom, had lived. "Our Mary," in telling "My Own Story" in the Ladies' Home Journal, recalls her humble beginnings on the stage in the city of Toronto. She admits an occasional longing for the theatre, but upholds the movies from the actor's standpoint, for the freedom, the chance to save money, the opportunity of Home Life. Only exception was strong, and the separations incident to the "road" in her early life were heartbreaking.

"With the Cummings Stock Company, at the Princess Theatre, Toronto, I made my first appearance on the stage," the writer says. "That was for I was five—in the part of Ned Denver, in Henry Arthur Jones' play, 'The Silver King.' This little boy, who wore a Fauntleroy costume, had only one speech:

"'Don't speak to her, girls; her father killed a man.'

"I built up the part a bit by introducing some 'business,' as we call it in the theatres. They gave me in one scene a hammer and some wooden blocks to play with. I piled the latter high and then ran the horse full speed against the tower. The clatter disconcerted my elders, who had important lines to get over, and spoiled the scene for the audience." (How like the boyish of the actress!) "The producer of the company allowed me to retain the business, but coached me to do it when I would not cause a disturbance. For this work I received five dollars.

"Later the same year another stock company came, and mother, hearing that 'The Silver King' was to be given again, took me down to see Miss Blanckie, the producer. Mother told her I could be a little girl who played Ned Denver with the last stock company.

"'I'll see that she can play Cissy Denver this time,' said Miss Blanckie, looking me over.

"'Oh, you can't trust her' with lines,' interposed mother, hastily.

"'I can do it,' I said.

"I felt most confident, for in the other engagement I had watched the little girl who played Cissy. At any rate, we took the part home with us, and while we were waiting for a car under an electric light mother read what Cissy had to say. It was not much, and I appeared at rehearsal next day with Cissy Denver mastered.

"I took the part that night. The beginning and was impressed with the wings, the lights and the mystery of it all. No one else in the family had been on the stage. My father's family were opposed to the theatre. My father believed that woman's sphere was in the home, and I suppose that had he lived, I would still be in Toronto, married to some promising young professional or business man. He died when I was but five, Jack, the men of the house, would take care of us.

"After playing Cissy Denver went into other plays, both with 'stock' in Toronto and with the Bessie Bonstelle Company in Rochester. I loved the sad scenes. I played Little Eva, in Uncle Tom's Cabin, pleased me, and old Dick, the Waif, in 'The Soudan.'"

No Longer Isolated.

Slowly, but surely, the Canadian Government is rapidly accomplishing the mapping of the vast sub-Arctic regions in the northern parts of the Dominion. Every year several parties penetrate farther the blank spaces at the top of the map. Until last summer these men were cut off from all communication with the outside world, their only information being occasional vague rumors passed on by the trappers and Indians. Now, however, all this is changed. Though a thousand miles from the nearest city, each engineering party daily receives complete news.

To the engineers, after so many years of working isolated, this wonderful contact was like receiving a new lease of life, which can only be only comprehended by those who have lived a month's journey distant from civilization. Equipped with portable wireless, the Government surveyors are able to daily give news of the outside world, much to the astonishment of the Indians, who are, however, fast becoming blase.

The Seton Family.

When Ann Seton was married in Greenwich, Conn., recently there was uncovered some interesting family history. Her father, Ernest Thompson Seton, the author-naturalist, lived in Toronto for many years and still has relatives in that city. She was married in her home town, to Hamilton Mayer Galatin, of Dale, N.Y., in the presence of 1,000 guests.

On her father's side, says the New York Times, the bride is a descendant of the family of the famous Mary Seton, one of the four Marys in attendance on Mary Queen of Scots. "There was Mary Beaton and Mary Carmichael and me," runs the old ballad. She was named for both of her great-grandmothers, Ann Gallatin and Ann Seton, from whom she inherited a considerable fortune, consisting of some old silver and linen.

The bride is a graduate of the Spence school, and is the niece of Albert Gallatin, who was a distantly related member of the well-known New York family. He was an executive of Central Hunter and Mark Hopkins and Leland Stanford when the Central Pacific Railroad joined the east with the west.

Noiseless Riveters.

Noiseless riveters operating on a rotary vibratory system, now of one-ton capacity, or pedestal type, which it is claimed will rivet the most intricate job in silence, at a speed limited only by the operator's ability to feed the work.

Wild Horses Become Pest.

A campaign to clear British Columbia stock ranges of wild horses has been initiated by the Provincial Government, under Grazing Commissioner T. P. Mackenzie.

Stockmen declare there are thousands of stray horses wandering over the grazing lands, and that they are a menace to domesticated horses.

Under clause in the Animals Act, stockmen are given authority to shoot horses straying on their ranges, but owing to the possibility of shooting their neighbors' stock, this regulation has been virtually ignored.

AN ANCIENT BOOK.

Was Established by Fur Traders In Sault Ste. Marie.

The lock of the canoe and bateaux canal built at Sault Ste. Marie by the North West Fur Company 135 years ago, which still remains a monument to the first attempt to conquer the St. Mary's Rapids, and to one of the earliest engineering ventures of the kind on the continent, was marked this summer by a cairn erected by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada, which was unveiled during Discovery Week by Sir Arthur Currie.

The lock is a reminder of the great days of the fur trade, when the canoes and bateaux laden with furs from the hinterland of Algoma and from the head of Lake Superior to Montreal.

After the British conquest of Canada, the first thrust was on the south side of the St. Mary's river, in the old French stockaded fort which was built by Repentigny in 1750. This was taken over by the North West Company on its formation in the winter of 1783-84. After the American revolution, however, once more and it was a pleasure, not a burden. MRS. DAVIS NERVOUS WRECK

Tells Women How She Was Restored to Perfect Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Winnipeg, Man.—"I cannot speak too highly of what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I was a nervous wreck and could hardly bear to force myself to do my work. Even the sound of my own children's voices made me feel as if I must scream if they did not stop talking. When I told my husband's mother advised me to take the Vegetable Compound and I started it at once. I was able to do my work once more and it was a pleasure, not a burden. DEFEATED LEADERS.

Ex-Premier Drury Shared the Fate of Eminent Men.

Premier Drury, of Ontario, has the consolation in his personal defeat, of plenty of company from the past, for leaders have long been a shining mark for the enemy in a political fight. Sometimes the leader neglects to look after his own affairs in his influence all over the country; at other times he goes down under the general tidal wave which sweeps a Government out of office. There are curious contradictions in such cases, however. Sir Charles Tupper welcomed his defeat in Cape Breton in 1900, after four years of leadership of the Opposition, for he was in his eightieth year. In all seriousness, he relied upon public life as a rest, he said in Montreal a few days later, "the greatest I have enjoyed for years. Remember my age!" The party would not listen to my idea of resigning."

It was very different with Sir John Macdonald in 1878. He had struck out of office for four years, and his party returned in a flood of reaction. He himself was defeated in Kingston, but he was returned for two other ridings, and decided to sit for Victoria, B.C. In those days party leaders chose lines of safety and insurance. In Sir John's hour of exultation, while waiting for the summons to form a Cabinet, he said in a letter to Goldwin Smith, writing from his St. George street residence, in Toronto (now the residence of Principal Gandiery): "I am waiting to be summoned, Lord Dufferin (error mine) having told me when here to keep my carpet bag ready." A few days later he wrote from Ottawa to Sir Edward Thornton, British Minister at Washington: "You will probably have learned that I am at work again here in a new Parliament."

Premier Arthur Meighen was defeated in Portage la Prairie in 1921 by Harry Leader, a Progressive, and was given a seat in the Senate. Out. While still Leader of the Opposition, R. L. Borden was defeated in Halifax in 1904, and was given a seat in Carleton, Ont., which he held for four years.

Very soon after he entered public life Wilfred Laurier was defeated in Drummond Athabaska; in fact, when he sought election on taking a seat in the Mackenzie Cabinet in 1877. It was a serious blow to the political man of promise, but Louis Frechette, who was with him that night, found Laurier the cheerful of the group. "I overheard Cook say to him any more than success exalts him," he wrote. "He receives it with the same smile. He defeat in 1877 was the terrible body blow, an unexpected, it might be, a fatal reverse. I was with him that evening along with other friends. We dined at the Russell. Yet his good humor never varied by a hair's-breadth from his habitual calm, and his hand did not shake with the slightest tremor as he raised his glass to the toast of better days."

WOLF HUNTERS IN BARREN LANDS.

Wolf Hunters in Barren Lands.

That the wolf hunters who were sent into the heart of the barren lands spring to check the ravages of the wolves which prey on the caribou herds have had a successful season is the word brought south by trappers from the Great Slave Lake. The party, which consisted of three men, was partly outfitted by the Government of the Northwest Territories and left Fort Smith in the early summer for the barrens in a schooner, well equipped with rifles and ammunitions, as well as poison gas, with which they expected to deal with the wolves after the trench warfare manner of the Great War.

During the latter part of February some of the Great Slave trappers penetrated as far north as Artillery Lake, and that time the wolf hunters had accounted for two hundred of the grey killers. It was their intention to remain in the district until the knife river in the spring. In this location it is believed that the wolves breed, and the wolf hunters were of the opinion that they would be able to kill off a considerable number of the young pups. Reports reaching the "outside" to the effect that one of the wolf hunters had perished during the winter are said to be unfounded.

HOUSEKEEPING.

What a Writer Has to Say About English Wives.

"I have reached this definite conclusion, that the position of a wife in marriage in this country is not at all a satisfactory one," writes Mr. Edward Cecil in the Royal Magazine.

"No doubt in the past many wise wife's have made the best of existing conditions, and done so extremely well. But a wife really has not the equality with her husband that she ought to have. She knows that she cannot quarrel with him beyond a certain point. She may set round him, she may use coquetry and simple harms deceptions, she may persuade him, but at the bottom her position is really unsound and insecure.

"The status of a wife should be much better than it is. The old theory of all real power resting in the hands of the man and all the petty power resting in the hands of the woman is a wrong one. It is old-fashioned, though it served its purpose in time. Now that women have interests outside the home. It is no longer possible to limit a wife to domestic work. Moreover, wives have to do work which is far harder than their husbands.

"People do not realize that housekeeping and home-keeping, if done thoroughly, is a great deal of real knowledge and capacity. The work involved entitles a wife to far more recreation than she usually gets. It is a common thing for the old-fashioned kind of woman to suffer from nerves in her middle age. She has been overworked. It is a pious superstition that housekeeping, shopping, and looking after children are pleasures and recreations, and not real, important, and serious work.

"It seems to me quite plain that if, in the future, marriages are to be made as safe as possible, wives must be given in marriage much better treatment than they have been given in the past, and that their right to proper consideration must be thoroughly recognized, and not conceded according to the goodwill of the lord and master."

ENORMOUS WHALE.

Also Spilled Soup.

Hon. Geo. P. Graham, Minister of Railways in the Federal Cabinet at Ottawa, is known in public life as a very human individual. His easy and offhand manner, as a matter of fact, has enabled his private life as well as on the political platform before a campaign audience. Many stories are told to illustrate Mr. Graham's ready sympathy with others and his healthy willingness to drop convention, if need be, in order to establish a friendly feeling wherever he happens to be.

Not along ago a young lady was a dinner guest at Mr. Graham's home when the following incident happened to be there. The visitor was afflicted with nervousness and, shortly after the party sat down, she accidentally upset a bowl of gravy from her plate on the spotless linen. Mr. Graham was quick to note her embarrassment.

"Never mind, dear," said the minister, with a kindly smile, as he deliberately tipped the gravy dish and spilled a generous pool on the table. The unfortunate girl joined in the general laughter and put the blushing guest completely at her ease. "I would walk miles to meet a man like that," she said later, in telling her friends of the incident.

Enormous Whale's Skull.

A whale skull, so large that it had to be sawed into eight pieces for handling and crating, was recently found on the shore of Alitak bay, Alaska, by a representative of the biological survey, United States Department of Agriculture, who was in the territory investigating the fox farming industry. First aid was given by the skipper of a passing ship, who took it to a nearby cannery, from which place it was possible to send it to the states. In accordance with a co-operative understanding the skull was sent to the Smithsonian Institution at Washington.

A. J. TERRILL, Chairman.
J. W. DOWN, Fin.-Sec.

After but a brief illness Minnie May Boyes, beloved wife of Mr. Jas. A. Wilson, passed away at her home on Bridge street on Sunday last. When first taken ill Mrs. Wilson was not considered seriously ill and was but a few days before her untimely death that the family were aware of the serious nature of her illness and the sympathy of the community goes out to the suddenly bereaved husband and family. Besides her husband she leaves four daughters, Mrs. Edmonds, a Missionary in Chung Chow Sze, West China, Mrs. R. Todd, Hamilton, and Misses Mary and Lillie at home, and two sons, Messrs. Herbert and Robert at home. Messrs. J. L. Boyes, Napanee, A. R. Boyes, Los Angeles, W. E. Boyes, Montreal and C. H. Boyes, Kingston are brothers of deceased. The funeral took place from her late residence on Tuesday afternoon to Riverside cemetery.

VELOUR COATS, FUR TRIMMED ALL SIZES, FOUR COLORS, $20.00 EACH

Last year our $20.00 Coats were the talk of the countryside. They met all requirements for a moderately priced coat. They had style, quality of material and real warmth.

This season in face of advance prices in materials and furs, we have secured a bigger and better Coat than ever. These Coats come in two styles. They measure forty-six inches long. The collar of Beaverine buttons up snugly about the neck. One style features silk rope stitching in the back above the belt, while the other employs ribbing and stitching on the sides below the belt.

These Coats are made from the same good quality of Velour, it is heavy, warm and durable.

The color range includes Brown, Sand, Castor and Manfloon. You will find that these coats compare most favorably with $25.00 and $27.50 coats seen elsewhere.

Choose now, a small deposit will keep until coat is wanted.
